No, actually. Video games are hard on VIDEO performance, John. Almost all of the processing load they create is handled by the GPU...

...a part which plays essentially no useful role in compiling and linking software.

The Mac is better for normal people, John. They want a machine that is easy to use and that doesn't have problems.

Most people don't want to modify their computers with performance add-ons any more than they want to do the analogous things to their cars.

You mean like claiming that video card performance is important to compiling?

The only thing they can actually threaten are over-the-air broadcasters.

With every passing quarter of increased Mac sales, that 'short period' keeps getting longer. There's not one single mfg of wintel boxes that wouldn't give a nut for Apple's sales and profits these days.

LOL! MS for a non-techie, balanced comparison of the two! Ya gotta love it!! :)

But keep in mind, if you buy a Mac you have both a solid OSX (unix) machine as well as a great Windows box too! A twofer!

I'm not seeing that we are having the same conversation.

Apple didn't need to switch either for that reason. It could have run *nix on its old hardware. It switched hardware twice when it didn't see that its old chips were advancing fast enough.

Microsoft has a bunch of hardware companies as primary customers.

Your post shows your total lack of knowledge that the GPU processor can be utilized to run/assist in the running of demanding apps ... load up seti software (POINC, actually), a freely available app which has the capabilities and gives a good demonstration of the advantages ... you probably aren't such a bad guy, just an ignorant one who needs some Excellent page, gives a starkly telling page of the honest facts in a tabbed and very organized format. Main feature, absolutely demonstrates the amount of religious devotion which must be exercised by a MAC user before they utter those telling words, "MAC is better."

And, there are many, many other hardware advantages which microsoft simply ignores, since they are not a hardware manufacturer of PCs ... yet are just as vast and stunning as those mentioned for the OS.

Just think how much apple is envying microsofts and even linux share of market ... MAC has marketing hype to attempt to capture market share with. PCs have speed, economics, diversity of apps and utilities, vast access to freeware/shareware, superior hardware, etc.

While hype has been stunningly successful in some applications, it is always short lived ...

To me, it is quite obvious, you simply argue a losing and mistaken point(s) ... weather by ignorance or design is the only question I have ...

I can say this, after the doctors tried all the possible solutions they had, my wifes daughter was suggested to try marijuana, by her doctor, she did, it worked, the very serious seizures were halted.

When I seen this, I immediately tried it for the back pain I experience from an old motorcycle accident ... I simply don't like to have to experience the high to alleviate the pain! I really can't drive and feel as if some other tasks are better NOT done under its' influence. But, point is it worked ...

So, when "the experts" claim "no medical value", they are simply spewing shit out of their mouths ... anyone who has taken the time, or just been forced to look at these issues knows ...

But then, only fools still believe the criminals in the government and fed ... from the president on down ...

For the last few years Apple has been growing in all phases of what they do. And growing profits at an alarming rate. And while I'm sure Apple wouldn't turn down market share if the profits grew the same, I'm also as sure they aren't interested in the market share at any cost attitude that seems prevalent in the wintel world.

Apple is delivering a fine, premium product at a premium price and the consumer with some money sees it as a value proposition.

Well yeah, they sell an iphone and ireader and other trinkets to the indians, and slaves ... I view the conversation here as being focused on MACs and PCs, although for "MAC people" to possibly have a leg to stand on, they are going to have to attempt to toss everything else in, including mice, phones, the kitchen sink, the apple on the top of a MAC laptop, case style, etc.

Or, simply put, they must divert the discussion away from the superiority of the PC to the hype and BS of MAC ... in a nut shell, MAC sucks in comparison. This point made, all which is left is the discussion as to why that is so ...

LOL! Even disregarding everything except the Mac computers, you haven't got a leg to stand on! Mac COMPUTER sales are up and growing, and have been for years, AND they are selling at a premium price 'cause they are a premium product, AND they are making great profits off them.

None of that applies to the current wintel market which is shrinking, with shrinking prices, and shrinking profits. Profits shrinking so bad that HP is looking at getting out of the wintel PC market just like IBM did years ago.

Don;t know if you're old enough to remember but if you are, consider that back in the 60s and 70s the majority of the medical community were very outspoken against vitamins. I remember one of my own doctors telling me that vitamin C or B and others were just a waste of time because if you went to the bathroom you were flushing all thise vitamins right down the toilet. Why? Because you don't need a doctor to prescribe a vitamin in order to get it.
The only reason the medical community has relaxed it's negative stance on nutrition is because of all of the overwhelming undeniable evidence proving nutrition is beneficial and helpful to human health.

Marijuana has been found to be helpful to Cancer patients, anorexics, schizophrenics, people with depression, people with sleep disorders and a host of other ailments.
But the "professionals" aren't going to get rich off of something that just grows out of the ground.

Well, I think there has been a fair representation, here, of most what can be said on the subject ... indeed, anyone reading just this thread will be aware of the important points to consider before purchase ... since I am sure everyone wants to respect everyone else in their making the important decision of which platform will properly be able to support the apps and uses they will be utilizing ...

Or, simply, looks pretty cut-and-dried to me ...

From my research and exposure to the drug, I can find little fault with your statements.

One thing I am firmly certain of, they have been ripping off taxpayers with all the associated crimes and costs of using our tax payer dollars against something which is not the danger they portray it as.

Indeed, I have been awakening to the lies, deceit and theft which has been going on for decades because I was willing to blindly believe the liars in public servant offices ... THIS HAS CHANGED!

I am outrageously upset with the crooks, from the president on down!

At the very bottom of this "house of cards" is simply that access to plants, growing on the face of the planet, given to man by God ARE NOT subject to control by other men for profits!

And, it only gets worse from there ...

Actually the Americans shipped a few Nazis to Argentina and to their own country. ('paperclip').

But beware, since now YOU have them.

I'm really a little bit frightened, if I read about the situation in the states.

For example: Wernher von Braun was a famous Nazi. (Another famous one developed the Saturn V engines.)

Now please - think about the Apollo mission and how the Americans got ripped off...

Not all the professionals have been bought off or intimidated. The

Indeed. The legal drug alcohol is more dangerous by any rational

If somebody wants to grow it and sell it for profit, that's their natural right. And if somebody else wants to grow it for their own use, or give it away, that's their natural right, as well.

Amazon is supposedly coming out with a $200 dollar upgrade to the Nook that will go directly against the IPad.
It will be running Android and will be open architecture.

I guess paying attention, or having a clue isn't part of your daily life. Amazon is coming out with a new Kindle Fire (note that Nook is from B&N) that is based on Android but is NOT open architecture. It is tightly tied to Amazon.

Absolutely, I was referring to the practice of using "criminalization" to make profits off of God given rights, property, resources and God sanctioned actions ... as being the crime(s) committed against God and man.

Looks like you completely missed it!

How can you so ignorantly and moronicaly confuse "... since I am sure everyone wants to respect everyone else in their making the important decision ..." with your draconian statement that someone "should" do anything ... amazing. Your mental processes to reach that logic are simply unfathomable!

But, at least you are consistent, your posts constantly reflect that flawed logic ...

For example, although different programs existed for presenting text and graphics, in mixed, useable forms, an example is adobe reader, microsoft first released a reader and format, .lit, which first "solidified" the format/concept of an "ebook." It was usable on any windows computer ... still is, but is now being discontinued ... most never even became aware of its' existence and microsoft never worked to give it much publicity ... it was only commonly used by those in the computer industry ... now there are many clones in many different formats ...

Soon after, you see competitors spring up and hardware become devoted to it.

Today, my TV, Stereo, DVD Recorder, etc. IS a computer ... I don't have a device dedicated for each and every separate task ... computer does it all. And, so is my "ebook reader" also my computer (actually, one of my laptops, or any of them, any desktop also, but I like to read in bed.)

To me, it is insane to buy an ebook reader when a laptop serves better ...

Frankly, html should become the standard ebook format and open access to all, and the hardware to present it allowed to openly compete in the marketplace "best ereader wins."

We may. But the application I have which is intolerably slow is Librarian Pro. Apparently it uses the Access database engine that has troubles with libraries as large as mine. A faster graphics card won't make it faster.

I wonder if I have any applications that I would notice a speed increase with a faster graphics card.

See, that only works when you remove that statement from the context it was originally written in, or the context of your statement that followed it. Put everything back in its original order and the impart is substantially different. Nice try, though.

... and, just to "hit those who missed the point, over the head with a 2 x 4!", a laptop IS the best ebook reader! Best movie machine, best .mp3 player, best TV, best DVD recorder, best camera, best stereo, etc., etc.

Just can't make coffee, OJ, toast, bacon, etc. or it would be the best breakfast machine too!

You can read it yourself, in the "original content" ... means the same now as when I wrote it, and just had to attempt to point out to you, again ... and even the consistency of your logic prevails here ...

Frankly, you have left me with the opinion you are a 12 year old or a severely developmentally disabled adult ... either way, I don't see much difference between you owning a MAC, a PC, or a notepad with a pencil ... therefore, what you argue is probably correct in "your context."

In general, the only apps you see that really benefit are games and Actually, they sell reliability and ease-of-use. Macs tend to "just work" in most cases, including many cases where Linux or Windoze require endless geekery to get something to work.

Reliability and ease-of-use come at a price. As someone who's an ex systems support person and completely sick of systems geekery, that price is worth it to me. If the price isn't worth it to you, don't buy Apple products. Simple.

Well, first a 3.0+ ghz processor, multicore/multithreaded, 64 bit OS, fast frontside buss, fast memory, fast storage devices/software, buffers created for redundant search/filing, etc. features, etc. would be the way to go ... then, with a firm base, exploit stealing GPU cycles/time ... if speed is really a valid need, water cooling and over clocking are very useful techniques -- of the CPU, itself -- applications using parallel processing, motherboards with multiple physical, and multiple cored, processors, etc.

Also, the search/storage formats, methods, techniques, structure of data handling is VERY IMPORTANT ... if speed is failing, you should attempt to locate software which uses BINARY TREES in the handling of the data ... by asking 10 questions, you can find one unique element within a pool of over 1,000,000 ... these are some of the most fast, effective and efficient data processing algorithms in existence, if not THE MOST ... I am thinking, if there is a need, someone has already written it, or is writing it ...

It is true, the application in question cannot use these advanced techniques, unless the application has been made capable/aware by the software engineers maintaining the app in question. It might be possible to locate one for the use in question, inquires of those in the field might put you on the right track -- if available. Often, I have been employed just to find applications/software to fit some extremely narrow slice of use ... many make a very comfortable income doing nothing else -- only consulting on software/hardware ... it is possible just to "ask around" and be privy to such valuable info., worth a try ...

But then, powerful video cards are usually only found in high end game and business/production, research machines ... slapping in a high end video card is certainly not the first, or even middle of the line, upgrade one would first jump to ... indeed, probably the last after every other possible upgrade and a want/need for speed is still a necessity ...

Or, simple said, it is well beyond the needs of most casual users (BOINC and computer games being a notable exception) ... however, valid when comparing/benchmarking hardware capabilities ... and, as pointed out, there are valid and valuable uses for it.

JS

It's election time again, and time for Obama to use the power of government to violently assault about the only thing that's not turning brown and dying in his economic garden. As a nod to the kook

And naturally if you don't need it, then no one does.

a 13% increase of a small number.....is still a small number.

I rarely keep a machine beyond two years, then it gets the "pass me down" to someone ... or the electronics recyclers where they pay me the grand price of ~0.36 a pound ... video cards, memory and other components going into the junk drawer for passing out to those in need ... I can't remember a computer ever failing me in that time, nor any component other than a power supply, now and then, which was abused and drew too much power through.

From time to time my attention is brought to some computer I gave away years ago, or even a decade ago which is still be used by someone ...

For me, the lifetime of PC's is simply a moot point, but I have a general sense they last a hell of lot longer than is necessary.

Someday, in the far future, computers may be used for long periods of time and remain current and up to date ... but to me, that time looks to be beyond the years I have left on the planet!

Or, simply, this is as valid a selling point as the radio in a car I purchase -- I never use it ... I always listen to media/podcasts/simulcasts/etc. on a laptop on one of the seats -- I simply tether a cell phone for net ... others mileage may vary.

When you control only about 4-4.5% of the market....a 13% increase in sales doesn't really show up as anything significant.

I would suspect the increase is drive by I-Pad sales....not Mac. For all we know the sale of Macintosh computers has dropped off.

when I still drank, I always dreamed of working for Budweiser, Coors, etc., or a hard booze producer, like Smirnoff ... :-)

I think I would have drank on that job too! <silly grin>

When in college, back in 1970, I worked construction, foreman would always have an icechest of beer at noon ... other than the odd day when some idiot would drink too much, and probably get his arse fired, I don't remember any major problems ... but, now-a-days, the insurance company would refuse to take your business if you engaged in the practice ... I am sure there would be a flock of attorneys following around that beer laden ice chest too!

What does open architecture mean?

What is needed is run any application, not just applications purchased thru amazon.

My wife has a Nook Color and it does just about everything she needs.
The web browser is pretty good.

I can remember a couple of family members underwent chemo ... we simply didn't know of the benefits of marijuana then, that it even helped their appetites, stopped puking, etc. ... too bad, next time I will certainly suggest it -- to anyone in chemo!

My wifes sister died of cancer, after every possible treatment there was for her to try ... she swore she would not been able to have extended her life, if not for the dope ... both doctor pills and marijuana ...

Reliability encompasses more than just service lifetime of the hardware.

Though that's largely irrelevant to my point. Again, if the price premium for a Mac isn't worth it to you (and it sounds like it's not), then just don't buy Macs (and it sounds like you're already not buying them). No problem; my feelings are not hurt in the least by someone making a different choice than I would have.

I was merely responding to "dave"'s inane comment that the only reason anyone would purchase an Apple product is for fashion or lifestyle reasons.

Yes, they said that about the Zune and the iPod, not to mention HP's pathetic effort at a tablet.

I find the vast majority think it is some kind of status symbol or have some cult devotion to them ... I just don't understand it ...

And, why you are worried about the lifetime of a computer which will be outdated in a year, two at max is rather perplexing ... unless you only use email, a browser and a NG reader ... and then you can get by with a 40 buck PC from the salvation army running windows 98 on ancient architecture ... better yet, check out the dumpsters behind any business, that is where I seen a lot of old computers end up ... my nieces kids pulled a few out of dumpsters to do a science fair project out of just last year or the year before ...

Like I say, outside of academia, I just don't see that many MACs ... my niece has MACs, but she works for them ... her kids have PCs ... as far as I know, those are the only MACs in my whole family and group of friends ... but I am sure there must be some around, in number, somewhere ... when I have worked for attorneys, I have seen some used, but then, mainly by attorneys who didn't know how to use a computer ... and yeah, I think they just carried them as a status symbol! Or, to play solitare, card games, match three games, tetris, etc. on the airplanes ... lol

Exactly, electronic books in an open architecture which can be read on any appliance using any software/hardware of choice ... instead of them all attempting to be "the next phone company" and sell us a ridiculously cheap service at a ridiculously HIGH PROFIT!

Might as well just buy the book ...

I already tried out an ersatz 'laptop' back in February or March of this year when I bought a Motorola Atrix smart phone with the laptop dock.Little bitty 10.5 inch laptop dock screen, Screw that sheet! A week after I bought that stuff, I took it back to the AT&T retail store and I got my money back, minus the restocking fee.
I found out a laptop is not for me.I prefer big desktop computers with big monitors.
I don't tote anyway.

My WebTV screen is a 27'' Sansui CRT TV set I bought at Walmart.

I have a little 10 inch Acer net book, actually, I love it. Just wish there was a usb cell TX/RX dongle and phone software, I'd chuck my android and have a REAL CELL PHONE ... and netbook ... the atom processor provides amazing performance for what it is ... I don't even notice the time passing at appts, shopping, etc. as I play solitare, surf, email, etc.

Eventually someone is going to outlaw reserve prices. It is a form of false advertisement, as you are implying by having a mimimum bid that if a buyer bids the minimum, and no one else bids, they can buy the item for that price.

Hidden reserve prices say that you really won't accept the minumum bid you advertised, and you aren't even going to tell anyone what it was.

IMHO a dishonest seller and should be avoided.

Geoff.

Geoff.

I see nothing dishonest about it. Each reserve auction has "RESERVE PRICE
NOT YET MET" in big red letters until it has been met.

If we are comparing "applications purchased thru Amazon", and "applications purchased somewhere else", we are talking about whether applications are currently available. And every platform has limitations about currently available applications that won't run on them.

I will note again though - I do buy ebooks from Amazon to read on my iPad.

Usually I don't maintain threads about guns. I have more interest in the Apollo program and did my personal kind of 'research' on that subject.
(Mainly reading articles, following links on the internet, watching films on YouTube and so forth).

Than I discuss my findings in forums like this one.

About the moon landing I have found a lot of inconsistencies within the pictures taken.
My conclusion is, that these pictures were faked - not even particularly sophisticated.

So: if the moon landing was faked, where then did the money go?

Since You most certainly don't trust me, I give you an example. (Only one)

Look at this picture
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/File:Apollo_CSM_lunar_orbit.jpg

It shows the lunar orbiter and the moon.
Since there is no other choice, the photo was obviously taken from the landing module 'Eagle'.

But the term 'orbiter' refers to the orbit, this vehicle keeps, while the lander lands.
Landing zone is usually below the orbit, hence the lander cannot take photos from the orbiter with the moon in the back.

to name a few:
If the orbiter was such an elaborated piece of engineering and certainly very expensive. Why does it look like a tin can, with something glued upon ? E.g. the lettering 'United States' misses half of the 'A'.

There are crosses, that should be all of the same size, but are not.

The conic tip would reflect only the surface and possibly the lander. But we see something different, because there seem to be something reflected, where darkness should be.

The contrast of the orbiter seems much higher than on the surface, but the difference in luminosity should be greater on the surface (the surface should have higher contrast).

Some of the rivets look like painted. Anyhow, 'rivets' wouldn't be the most durable joint.

This metal piece near the conic tip looks rusty (?).

Greetings

TH

(Actually I regard it as kind of sport, to find 'easter-eggs', what are such anomalies.)

It is a "bit of a strange way" to run an auction ... the bidding should be forced to start at a minimum acceptable, and go from there ... I agree, ebay would appear "more" legit if tradition were followed ... but in the scope of the world, it is only a minor transgression.

I have a relative who works for a large publisher, she has access to a non-destructive book scanner, I ship the books to NY, book rate, she scans them and emails me the digitized file, if I wish to keep the physical book, she mails it back, if not, she turns it in at a used book store for credit for her acquisitions ... covers and any pics included, I convert them to .html and use my html reader and laptop.

I have gotten so used to carrying the laptop with me, it just seems natural. I always have it in small backpack which also comes in handy for any other items I need to carry, such as a small thermos of expresso, tobacco, notepad, snacks, extra ammo, etc.

Fishing, family outings, appointments, waiting for the wife shopping, visiting my mothers', etc. ... I just never leave home without it ... it is simply loaded with books and decoded/digitized movies, mp3's, etc. ... any I wish to keep, I archive on DVD ...

I can't even imagine what it would be like to be without these capabilities ... my wife calls my backpack my "man-purse."

I was just thinking, that probably only encompasses whole, complete computers ... since I build my own, and most of my families and friends computers, they are not even counted ... in the final analysis, you can see that figure simply is not a meaningful representation of the total PC market ...

ARLP041 Propagation de K7RA

Robust solar activity continues. Check http://www.spaceweather.com for daily images of the Sun, and you'll see it is full of spots. You can also use the archive feature to view the position of sunspots for previous days.

The average daily sunspot number for the week (95.4) was about the same as last week (96.7) and the week before (96.1). The number hasn't stayed steady though, with daily variation as low as 82 and as high as 126 over the past two weeks. You can check http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpmenu/forecasts/SRS.html for daily updates showing which numbered groups appeared and faded away, along with the relative area covered by each one.

The latest forecast from USAF/NOAA has solar flux at 135 on October 14-15, 130 on October 16-20, 125 on October 21 through November 2, 120 on November 3-5, and 125 on November 6-8. The predicted planetary A index is 5 on October 14, 8 on October 15-17, 5 on October 18-27, 8 on October 28-30 and 5 on October 31 through November 2.

Geophysical Institute Prague predicts quiet conditions on October 14, quiet to unsettled October 15, unsettled October 16, quiet to unsettled October 17, and quiet October 18-20.

Lots of 10 meter activity lately, and Jeff Hartley, N8II of Shepherdstown West Virginia sent this last week:

"Today, Oct 7th, the SFI was only 125 and 10M was wide open to EU at 1220Z (65 minutes after sunrise) with a very large amount of activity. As we move into October, a bit lower SFI will produce openings equivalent to those around the equinox 2 weeks ago with higher MUFs. I started off the day breaking a EU pile up calling 7Z1TT in Saudi Arabia who was S9. I called one G running a vertical and 100W who was S9 and two stations called me when signing. Then I

QSY'd up to 28530 kHz where there was still plenty of activity and ran off about 10 QSOs before having to QRT. 10 was wide open to the Moscow area and Great Britain which has been left out of many recent openings; M0RAD was S9+25 dB. XU7SSB (Cambodia) was worked on 15 CW S7 around 1300Z.

"T32C has been good strength to loud on all bands in the past week and I've logged them on every HF band except 40M including both modes on 15, 12, and 10M. 10M is routinely open to the Rockies and west coast an hour or more after sunset and I was lucky enough to have VK4FAXA running 10W call in from McClay Island, IOTA OC-137, on 10M last night. 10M conditions have been great except over the pole from here, not that many JA/Asia openings."

Michael Gutman, K2CHM of Mashpee, Massachusetts writes, "10 meter propagation is certainly feeling a lot like 1958. I worked T32C on 10/9 at 7:25 PM on 28.485 MHz and he was 59. It is impressive to me as I run only 100 watts to a dipole in the attic here at sea level on Cape Cod."

Mark Lunday, WD4ELG of Greensboro, North Carolina wrote on October 11, "Nothing gets the blood moving like a 10 meter opening at sunrise! BY, 4K, ZD7, VU, 4S, and of course tons of EU stations, all at 0800 local, and all audible on wire antennas. Feels almost like 2001 all over again!

"In fact, 10 and 12 have been spectacular this week. I am rapidly closing in on 9BDXCC using only LoTW...only 25 more to go on 12 and 10, then that leaves just 160 for the final jewel in the crown."

You can feel Mark's excitement! Check his blog at http://wd4elg.blogspot.com/.

We also receive 6 meter reports. Anibal Dos Ramos, HK3R of Bogota, Colombia says that on Sunday, October 9 he made his longest distance 6 meter contact yet. It was 2318 UTC when he contacted KH7Y on both SSB and CW, and he heard KH7Y for about 30 minutes with S9 signals. He estimates the distance was 8,897 km (5,528 miles) and he heard no other Pacific stations.

There is much more on 6 meters and the recent meteor showers. Perhaps we can report on that next week.

Roger Harrison, VK2ZRH sent an interesting email about propagation of VHF signals from Dubai in the Middle East to the Far East. He wrote:

"Over September 12-16, United Arab Emirates TV signals from Dubai on 48.25 - 53.75 MHz, were being copied in Shenzhen in south-east China, Hong Kong and the Philippines, which are all in the UTC+8 time zone; Dubai is UTC+4. Dan VR2HF is the HK contact, while George DU1GM is located 80 km south of Manila.

"The 48.25 MHz video signal typically reached S9+20 dB on peaks. The 53.75 MHz sound channel was received for short periods when the MUF peaked.

"Optimum reception time was around 1200-1300 UTC, although sometimes signals were received in Hong Kong as early as 1130 UTC (1930 HK local time).

"The propagation path ranges from about 5900 km to 7200 km and is generally in daylight in mid-September. As this is the equinoctial season, when the occurrence of sporadic E is a minimum, I thought the propagation was most likely to be F2, requiring two hops of about 3000 km each to Shenzhen/Hong Kong, and about 3600 km to DU1

"Dubai is located about 18 degrees N geomagnetic latitude, while Shenzhen and Hong Kong are at about 11-12 degrees N geomagnetic latitude. Manila is directly beneath the geomagnetic equator.

"The propagation path is largely beneath the northern Equatorial Ionospheric Anomaly (also known as the Appleton anomaly) in the F2 region, which lies generally between 10 and 20 degrees geomagnetic latitude north (another forms south of the geomagnetic equator). It is the region of high electron density that forms late morning local time, builds during the day and can last 6-7 hours into early evening.

"For the Dubai to Shenzhen/Hong Kong path, the first F2 reflection point would be 1500 km east of Dubai, near the northern extent of the EIA, and in the UTC+5 time zone. The second F2 reflection point would be about 4500 km east of Dubai, in the UTC+7 time zone and near the middle of the EIA. To support 48 MHz propagation, foF2 at each F2 reflection would need to be above 14.5 MHz as a 3000 km F2 skip has an M-factor of about 3.3.

"The only vertical incidence ionosonde with available online data that I could locate in the EIA zone is at Guangzhou, about 100 km northwest of Shenzhen, and 140 km northwest of Hong Kong. Although at the propagation path's eastern end, the growth of the EIA "follows the Sun" westward and the Guangzhou foF2 values provide a good guide as to how the EIA develops during the day, from which we can infer likely foF2 values west along the propagation path. NOAA's Space Weather Prediction Center lists the Guangzhou ionosonde's parameters here:
http://www.swpc.noaa.gov/ftpdir/lists/
iono_month/201109_Guangzhou_iono.txt.

"For September 13, foF2 was above 16 MHz from 0500 to 1100 UTC, which implies that the highest electron density of the EIA covered a longitudinal extent of 6 hours. The 1st F2 reflection point will determine when the path opens as the 2nd reflection point will be well covered by the EIA. As the openings commenced around 1130-1200 UTC, the foF2 at the 1st reflection point must have reached 14.5 MHz at 0830-0900 UTC, which is 3.5 hrs after foF2 hit 16 MHz at Guangzhou. The discrepancy can be put down to the fact the 1st reflection point is closer to the northern edge of the EIA, where the electron density would take more time to accumulate to the high values found near the middle of the EIA.

"Undoubtedly, the propagation experienced was supported by 2-hop F2 skip east-west along the EIA.

"The Dubai-DU1GM path is reported to experience longer durations and higher signal strengths than the Dubai-Shenzhen/HK path. Each skip is about 3600 km, just shorter than the maximum F2 skip of about 4000 km. For F2 skips of this length, the M-factor is about 4, so foF2 only needs to reach 12 MHz to support 48 MHz propagation, and the EIA achieves this earlier and sustains it longer.

"For the record, the 10.7 cm flux over September 12-16 was 124, 129, 143, 141, 143, and the A index was 17, 11, 5, 4, 2 (NOAA weekly figures)."

Anyone needing state-of-art/specialized-use obviously has a custom built

Hogwash! What you build and other hobbyists also, is such a tiny part of the sales market it has no real bearing on the issue at all. And for the most part, few companies care about that build-your-own hobbyist market except some parts makers.

Some gaming computers are hobbyist built, many are bought off the shelf or from companies that specialize in that market. Other specialized uses for computers are readily available on either off the shelf or built to order basis by companies that do show their sales figures.

Your hobbyist references represents a miniscule part of the overall market that has little significance in the overall market.

Wrong, that is the amount sales have increased.

Mac sales still only constitute about 4.5% of total PC sales.

PC sales in Q2 2011
"Overall, the number of units reached 85 million, of which HP, Dell, Lenovo, Acer and ASUS accounted for 17.5%, 12.5%, 12%, 10.9% and 5.2%, respectively."

http://news.softpedia.com/news/Gartner-Confirms-that-PC-Sales-Rose-in-Q2-2011-211780.shtml

Meanwhile: Mac sales are:

Mac sales in Q2 2011
"Mac sales increased 28 percent from last year, with 3.76 million sold"

http://gigaom.com/apple/apple-q2-2011-macs-and-iphone-up-apple-also-sold-4-69-million-ipads/

3.76/85 = 4.4%

So sales are actually less than my estimate of 4.5%

That's a LONG way from the 13% you assert.

No, bubba, sales of Macs increased by 13% (probably from Q1 2011) not that Mac sales constitute 13% of all PC sales.

IOW, sales of Mac increased from about 3.25 Million to 3.76 Million per quarter.

But next to total PC sales of 85 Million.....that's a pretty minimal change representing a difference of only about 0.6% increase in market share for that quarter.

Further if we look the BULK of Mac sales are the mobiles. Desktop Mac sales continue to drop off.

"Apple sold 2.75 million laptops, compared to 1.01 million desktops, with laptops accounting for 73 percent of Mac sales for the quarter. By the end of the calendar year, it's likely three out of four Macs sold will be portables. The inexorable trend towards niche status for desktops continues."

http://gigaom.com/apple/apple-q2-2011-macs-and-iphone-up-apple-also-sold-4-69-million-ipads/

Seems people don't want a Mac sitting on their computer desk, unless they can walk away with it.

Good point. Certainly the source I just used only talks about computer sales for complete systems. While in reality a lot of PC are component built either by the consumer or by local computer stores.

Which would explain why I don't see as many Macs as would be indicated by the fact that about 4.5% of all PC sales are Macs. Because PC sales of those built up from components aren't counted. Which would mean every system I have wouldn't count because ALL were component built. Yet, they are active computers.

I doubt that all the custom builds at the little mom and pop PC stores are recorded ...

Obvously, you have not been at a computer show and swap at San Francisco, LA, Las Vegas, etc.

I don't even know how to get facts and figures to extrapolate from ... I have built hundreds over just the last decade, just myself ... people from the college, family, friends, neighbors, boy scouts, volunteer in senior services, etc. ... I don't know how many I would have ended up building if I'd attempted to make a hobby-business out of it ...

Get real, over a decades I have seen thousands of computers, and just a handful of macs ... I keep hearing about the number of macs, just never see them ... I have always thought this strange ... at the local college here there is one mac lab and multiple pc labs on campus ...

JS

Interesting.....it has been for a large number of years when discussing market share.

True, but unless they are a major player, then the PCs they build up from components probably are never counted. Certainly I know several people that build computer systems on the side, and I'm quite certain they have never reported their sales volume to any researchers or poll takers. I suppose if one were to count motherboard sales and/or CPU sales one might be able to get a better calculation, but I don't see any indication that is a consideration since they only seem to count system sales and then only from the major players.

Only if they are a major player. The small business individual or local computer store probably never even shows up. However, I bet they represent a significant portion of total PC sales.

Based on what I've seen on people's computer desks. I would say around 50% are component built systems. Just skim through Ebay and see how many systems are actually brand names, and how many are simply computers that someone has put together.

So, I would have to challenge your assertion that such sales constitute a "miniscule part of the overall market". Because my experience and evidence would show they constitute a rather significant portion of the total market.

If you haven't seen them, that is even a better indication of your lack of real knowledge of the computer market as a whole. Just some hobby crap you do.

These days I suspect they aren't counted. But that is because these days the small builders have almost disappeared, leaving only the 1-2 man shops with low profits to pick up the dregs of a once thriving market.

They just aren't these days. There was a day when the small shops were a significant part of the market, those days are long over.

You must go to some really poor spots!! :)

Most places I've been all have brand name boxes there.

My experience was with a small dealership that both built and sold wintel boxes, and also sold brand names. We sold a lot and our figures were reported in via some of the wholesalers we dealt with. Our custom built business declined over many years because the profits are so thin on these things that building your own isn't profitable if you have to pay for your labor. It was increasingly obvious that the only way to make as much profit as we wanted to make, we would have to quit making custom boxes. And we did just that. Just as almost all of the small shops did. The only ones left making custom stuff for the most part these days are the 1-2 person shops.

Insignificant in today's market.

When you choose to compare worldwide shipments for PCs to US shipments for Macs you might get a distorted view. Rather than pick and choose numbers from different sources, how about getting them from a single source?

Like I say, I think what I have seen is pretty much the norm ... although I'd like to be ... I am just not that special.

Or, in other words, those who haven't seen what I am speaking about most Really?

I suggest you browse through the systems for sale on Ebay and take note of how many are NOT brand systems, but component built.

Further I will note:

Looking at just the top 5 retail motherboard makers.

Own Brand Retail motherboard sales in 2010 (does NOT include OEM sales)

Asustek - 21.6 Million
Gigabyte - 18 Million
ASRock - 8 Million
ECS - 7 Million
MSI - 7 Million

Total = 61.6 Million

http://www.bit-tech.net/news/hardware/2011/01/28/asrock-third-largest-motherboard-maker/1

Given Q2 2011 PC sales were 85 Million

So let's assume that's typical.

85 * 4 = 340 million per year plus the 61.6 million systems being sold by the top 5 motherboard makers.

equals 401.6 Million computers per year

61.6 /401.6 = Market share of over 15% (if you calculate for TOTAL computer sales)

Which is about FOUR TIMES the TOTAL Mac sales. (3.76 Million *4) (or about 3.7% of computer sales)

Does that mean Mac sales are "a tiny part of the sales market it has no real bearing on the issue at all. "?

After all Mac sales are at most only about a quarter of the sales of retail motherboards. So if component built systems are too few to matter, then Macs would be even MORE so.

>And for the most part, few companies care about that build-your-own >hobbyist market except some parts makers.

61.6 Million motherboards sold last year would tend to suggest otherwise.

Indeed, that is the only part of your whole post which has any relevancy!

I just went with a relative to social security, while assisting him (is partially blind), I noticed every computer at every desk was a PC ... and mostly custom built ... apparently their IT dept. puts them together

I can tell you that the local SS offices sure don't have no brand computers in their offices.

But whatever the market share of what is, the profits are not with wintel or Linux desktop boxes. No matter who or how they are built, tiny profits seem to be the norm. Except at Apple...

Now we can argue that all you want. But keep in mind, IBM got out of the wintel desktop/laptop market years ago, and it looks like HP is going to follow. No profits will do that.

More likely, most of it has simply gone to the internet.

Those that recognized this early on continue to thrive....those that depended only on walk-in sales in the face of cheaper mail order systems failed.

About 15% at least by the numbers I've already posted.

To put that in perspective Mac sales would be only about 3.7% per the same market.

Nope, they have simply gone mail order and as such they may no longer really have a "store front" in a physical sense.

Local area LAN meets, people's homes, and of course quite a bit of computer repair, upgrade and even sales on the side.

Must have been businesses, home computers however tend to be much more of the off brand (ie component built) or no brand (ie component built)

ABout 15% if you consider that insignificant I can only wonder how you view Mac sales of 3.7%....

MACs used to be popular in school settings and universities. It was originally felt that if folks got used to MACs that they would order them and use them at the office in lieu of PCs. Hasn't worked out that though.

Certainly it can. Depending on the orbits used, the lander can easily "descend" upon the orbiter. Indeed it is typical after undocking to go to a slightly higher orbit to allow the orbiting craft/station to pass under you (lower orbit being faster) until it clears the area, and then when you come up on the point to begin your de-orbit burn the area is clear, as no matter what you do at that point the other craft is only going to move further away from you. If you tried to go a lower orbit move ahead of the orbiting craft and then try to de-orbit the orbiting craft would be catching up to you as you slowed and if you accidently "ballooned up" a bit because your angle was slightly off....you could possibly even run into each other. Not a good thing. Nor do you want to wait forever for the gap to open up enough as your time in space is strictly limited. Safer to simply move a bit higher, let it pass under you and then there is no possibility of that occurring. And gee, while you're sitting there you snap a picture out the window and poof the planet/moon is in the background. SOB.

So if this is your BEST evidence, then this is really going to blow your socks off.

"The International Space Station photographed following separation from the Space Shuttle Endeavour in 2001."

http://news.medinfo.ufl.edu/articles/miscellaneous/mbi-discovery-prompts-development-of-space-radiation-sensors/

Damn, is that the EARTH in the background?

"Last August, the Space Shuttle Endeavour crew captured this shot of the International Space Station (ISS) against the backdrop of Planet Earth. "

http://www.astronomy-pictures.net/nasa_astronomy_pictures.html

Damn, there it is again.

"International Space Station (ISS), March 2011, taken from the Space Shuttle Discovery after undocking at the end of its mission to the ISS"

http://www.sciencephoto.com/media/395325/enlarge

And again. Damn, one might even see this as a theme.

http://www.msnbc.msn.com/id/26441443/

So tell me does this mean the International Space Station is a fraud, or shall we simply consider the possibility that what you see as photographic flaws are really just a symptom of your ignorance of the mechanics of space flight?

Liberty Net: October 8, 2011

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

ONE THING TO CONSIDER when checking in to the Liberty Net is the efficiency of your transmitting antenna. Commercial antenna solutions are usually inferior to home made wire antennas on 75 meters, and tall trees are your friend. Full size (even if the ends have to hang down vertically) dipoles and inverted vees, preferably 50 to 80 feet up at the feedpoint, do well, as do full size verticals or inverted Ls with elevated counterpoises or extensive radial systems.

This week we also welcomed Marty, N2IRJ back to the net after a too-long absence!

Here are some of the ideas discussed this time on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running and most exciting discussion net:

ï¿½ Why has the CBS reporter who was the leading journalist covering the ï¿½Operation Fast and Furiousï¿½ scandal suddenly been taken off the air and declared ï¿½unavailableï¿½ by her network bosses? (23 minutes)

ï¿½ Why do the old media go out of their way, when describing flash mob attacks by Blacks on Whites, to avoid mentioning race ï¿½ instead using such weasel words as ï¿½teenagers,ï¿½ ï¿½youths,ï¿½ and the like? (32 minutes)

ï¿½ America is truly dead and buried: The regime in Washington now has a secret panel empowered to add your name ï¿½ or anyoneï¿½s ï¿½ to a ï¿½kill listï¿½ of those to be murdered under color of law. (49 minutes)

ï¿½ Washington has also given itself permission to use armed killer drone aircraft against us in the skies over America. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ With all the real problems that exist in this world, it is somewhat psychedelic that a new secret police agency has been created within the wildly misnamed Justice Department called the ï¿½Laser Pointer Task Force,ï¿½ the purpose of which is to arrest and criminalize people who point their handheld laser pointers in the wrong direction. (54 minutes)

ï¿½ In Chicago, it is now official policy for anyone arrested (even for many felony offenses) to be automatically released if he or she is found to be an illegal immigrant. (1 hour 15 minutes)

ï¿½ In California a law has been enacted that overturns the referendum against Affirmative Action. Under its Alice-in-Wonderland impossible logic, schools will now be allowed to ï¿½consider raceï¿½ during the admissions process ï¿½ as long they do not ï¿½grant preferences.ï¿½ (1 hour 33 minutes)

ï¿½ How can the operator of a ï¿½predator droneï¿½ accurately identify who he or she is about to murder? How can he or she determine how many innocents are in the targeted house or apartment building? Is there any ethical oversight of this process? Does anyone even care? (1 hour 38 minutes)

The Liberty Net ï¿½ amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion net ï¿½ is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or around 3950 kHz SSB (lately itï¿½s been higher in frequency ï¿½ as high as 3993, but more often around 3980 or 3965 ï¿½ to avoid interference). Youï¿½ll have to tune around, but itï¿½s not hard to find!

Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air (the N2IRJ feed is the default chat feed while N2SAG is temporarily off the air). And, as always, you can download the net right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

They do track motherboard sales and CPU sales. It may seem that they aren't included because they are in the "other" category.

I done rigged up a quick and easy cat trap drop box.What it is, I already have a metal shell that was on my old natural gas floor furnace, it measures 28 1/2'' by 15'' by 13'' tall.It doesn't have a top and bottom.I used a piece of screen wire like the kind that are on some of those so-called front door/guard doors.I attatched the screen wire to the top of the old furnace shell with some wire.I am going to prop up the bottom with a stick and have a long string tied to the stick.Then I will start feeding those feral cats for a few days untill they get used to going into my cat trap.

Because it basically was a tin can. Weight is everything in space flight (particularly back then) and so you kept everything at the minimum possible weight. Thus the "tin can" appearance.

> with something glued upon ? E.g. the lettering 'United States' misses half > of the 'A'.

Because it probably was. If you notice there are a row of little dimples or bumps down the length of the module, and the decal is located over this row of dimples/bumps.

If you look at the high res scan of it you can see this most clearly.

http://next.nasa.gov/alsj/a15/AS15-88-11963HR.jpg

Now, on launch the craft is subjected to rather significant air flow and turbulence. It seems quite probable that when the air pressure during launch pressed against the decal it stretched it into those dimples/bumps and the lettering (which was probably printed on) either flaked off, stretched out of shape or otherwise became lost/distorted.

They aren't the same size. The center and I believe the outer corners were oversized. The high res and uncropped photo link above.

> The conic tip would reflect only the surface and possibly the lander.

Yep, so?

> But we see something different, because there seem to be something > reflected, where darkness should be.

You did note that the module is in a NOSE DOWN attitude?

That's going to impact what is being reflected.

> The contrast of the orbiter seems much higher than on the surface, but the > difference in luminosity should be greater on the surface (the surface > should have higher contrast).

That would depend on a number of items. Film, shutter speed, aperture, focal length, Heck it might even, gasp, be a different camera. I mean you are aware that they used a different camera on the surface than they did for the one they used for the in orbit shots?

Indeed, consider for a second your own thoughts. Now would you get greater contrast with a moderately lit object against a brightly lit background. Or in an environment in which everything is subject to high illumination?

Keeping in mind you're going to have to change shutter speed and/or aperture in order to keep from over exposing the film.

> Some of the rivets look like painted. Anyhow, 'rivets' wouldn't be the > most durable joint.

Actually a riveted joint is quite durable. Look at all the bridges a 100+ years old that were riveted.

Further a rivet doesn't have the stress risers you find on a screw, and it has a larger effective cross sectional area. That means more strength in a lighter weight fastener. Remembering that every ounce matters.

> This metal piece near the conic tip looks rusty (?).

If you mean the piece directly above the attitude jet. Yes, it does seem discolored. Bet you would be discolored too if subjected to the high temperature bursts of some rather nasty chemicals used in those thrusters.

I will simply note you apparently haven't even bothered to do an in-depth analysis of something you claim was faked. As such your conclusions seem based on ignorance more than because anything is wrong with the photos.

No, IBM got out of the RETAIL computer market. They still provide computers for the BUSINESS market, and make quite a bit of money doing so.

The problem is the PC market is very competitive and being a name brand just isn't enough that people will pay lots more money to own inferior hardware.

Actually, I think it would be exclusively PC, since I don't believe they sell the primary components of Macs on the retail market. Might be able to do something in the salvage market but that's really a matter of reassembling a computer rather than building a new one from unused parts.

That's about where you're going to find them since 3/4 of Macs being sold are the laptops. The Mac desktop market keeps shrinking.

You don't need to tell me how competitive it is, I was in the biz for over 20 years.

Your statement would ring truer if Apple wasn't able to sell upscale computers at premium prices. Hell, they sell everything at premium prices and make a hell of a big profit margin on all of it.

I bet I can give him something that will really blow his mind.

In orbit you go faster to slow down, and slow down to go faster.

Sorry, they are selling more desktops because of an expanding market, but their share in that expanding market is decreasing.

The only place that Macs are making gains in their market share is in the laptop arena.

Yep, it's a small nitch market among a following of people sold on the brand.

That doesn't happen in the PC market because the O/S isn't brand specific.

Whole Lot of 'Rivets' in Aircraft . . . well at least until composite-structures became the norm.

When the boat people came from nam to the central valley, in the 1970's, the wild/lost/abandoned/etc. animal problem became a moot point ... I have not seen a dog catcher in years, maybe a couple of decades ... but, I remember all the papers and news, govt. officials claiming it was a myth that they were eating the dogs, cats, etc. ... in looking back, that was just the beginning of the lies to come.

Other arguments in this thread have been claiming a shrinking desktop market. Which arguments are correct?

Desktop computers last longer nowadays before becoming obsolete for most functions. And there are more and better alternatives to desktop computers than there used to be.

Actually you can be a 'truther' and live outside the USA.

I did some sort of 'research' on 9-11, too. Actually I have an own 'theory', that circles around flight 93.
There seems to be a plot. This is the picture - or story- that was intended, but not achieved. Actually Mr.Bush messed it up (in my assumption).

It goes like this:
I call it a 'dance of planes and falling skyscrapers'.
The original plot was, that north tower gets hit, south tower gets hit, pentagon gets hit.
South tower falls down, flight 93 hits building 7, north tower falls down, building 7 falls down. (South tower had to fall first, because building 7 is behind it).

Instead the flight was delayed and Mr. President so perplexed, that he had to think about a solution very hard (and for several minutes). Than he gave order to shoot down the plane, what was promptly done.
Flight 93 was apparently approaching Indean Lake Airpark, but didn't.
make it there and fell in parts into the Indean Lake.

Later on the WTC 7 fell without a hit.

Actually I don't like the term 'truther'. And I don't like the term 'conspiracy theory', but these phrases are commonly used.

I think, if the government does does something illegal, than this isn't a conspiracy. Its just illegal.

The decline from orbit is a difficult subject, too. Imagine a space capsule in Moon orbit. There is no air. To land and to stop the craft in horizontal movement, you need to fire the engine in reverse thrust (against flight direction). This is not seen on any of the films or pictures. And it is - of course - difficult and fuel consuming.

The opposite is even more difficult and that is to restart and making the rendezvous with the orbiter. This is next to impossible, because there is no assistance from the ground, helping to correct the flight path (nobody there, on moon surface). And completely impossible is, to store the needed fuel in a single craft. (No gas station there, neither).

You know how Flying Fortresses look like what they are called when they are marching across the sky amid puffs of smoke?

I've been in one. On takeoff and in flight. Most aircraft are tin cans. It was scary how loud the engines were through the tin aluminum fuselage. And I got to ride up front for a bit. Unnerving sitting in the big plxy bubble imagining FW flying in wing breast shooting at you at a closing rate of north of 600+ MPH.

Very, very few airplanes were built, designed to be flying armored cars.

A Junkers purpose built trench strafer in the first WW.
The Sturmovik in WWII
And the modern day A-10.

Anything else that was bullet resistant it was an accident.

Most aircraft you can puncture with a Philips screwdriver.

I don't think you or I will live long enough to see the 'year of the mac' if that is defined as Apple being the dominant tech provider. Not going to happen.

But the 'year of the Mac' has already happened in the upscale tech market with consumers with a few bucks.

I don't know what soros is doing, or what effect he is having. I can make a statement about myself though, why I am pissed off at my public servants is that the offices have all become full of criminals.

Why I have been pissed off and lost all faith in ever getting truth from main scream media is that they are consistently caught in lies and all main scream media positions have become full of professional liars ...

I have joined the younger crowd, the net is now my source of news and information ...

In business, the reality is growing your sales and profits. In that, it has been the year of the Mac for quite awhile now. You are free to talk about what volumes of sales are out there in wintel/linux world, but that is being done at pathetic profit levels.

Overall, desktop sales on all platforms is down as more go to laptops. Primarily because laptops now have enough performance for almost all applications and the prices are down quite a bit. Heck for all the bitching about Apple's prices, laptops with similar specifications and build quality are all pretty much the same in cost.

Apple just doesn't do cheap laptops.

For a film supposedly shot in the 90s by a profrsddional broadcast outlet, the quality is horrible. I think the cnspiracy is who put this piece of tripe together. The crappy print does not lend it credence, it makes it comical.

What were the IBM laptops are now manufactured and marketed by and under

It's dishonest because the seller has a minumum you can not find out until you bid and reach it. Plus since the minimum advertised is not the real minimum, it's false advertisement.

If the minimum bid is $1, you can't bid $1 and win it.

It happened here in Israel with lottery tickets. The state lottery was selling "win a million" scratch off tickets. Someone bought one expecting to be able to win a million and found out that the million had already been won, six weeks before. There was no chance of him winning the million, so he sued for false advertisement and won.

Which came about when IBM added to its laptop development venture in the early 90s with Legend out of China who made some of its components. In the mid-90s development moved from Boca Raton, FL to Raleigh, NC. In the early 2000s, the Lenovo name was introduced although it had been in internal use for some time. In 2004 IBM announced that Lenovo would take over IBM's PC Division.

Yes, IBM still produces computers, but not laptops or PCs. They concentrate on the "BIG" market.

Yes, they do.....of which part of that goes to why they are a much smaller (although wildly devoted) segment of the industry.

Interesting. Where did you observe this? (That is something I

But I have observed changes in Macs in the last 20 years.

Actually, the South tower fell first because there was more building for that weakened structure to support.

Actually, no, it didn't.

That's not true either. It just wasn't hit by an airliner. It was hit by debris.

You can rest easy then, since it didn't happen.

I would suggest that you read Debunking 9/11 by Popular Mechanics. They not only goes through all the major conspiracy claims but has executive summaries of the actual reports, in addition to URLs where you can read, at your heart's content, all 10,000 pages of them.

Thousands of items are sold by reserve auction daily, it's not a dishonest, and it's definitely not fraud. It's never going to go away, so get over your dislike of it, or don't bid on anything that has one.

So basically you're claiming that since the person putting the label on did not necessarily have a good grasp of teminology, the photo is a fake ?

This is the kind of stupidity that is so typical of the conspiracy nuts

Both.

Yep, but the alternatives are most expensive, less durable, limited in upgrade options, and generally poorer performance than a comparable desktop.

Which is why Apple sells only a small fraction of the number of laptops sold. PC dominates over Mac even in the laptop market

At such a low profit margin that HP, one of the biggest in the biz is seriously looking at dumping wintel desktop/laptop production and sales.

Apple has been making all the right moves these days. Good products that are very popular at a price point that makes them great profits. A success by any measure except for the 'market share at any cost' types.

They literaly own the tablet market at the moment. But will they own the desktop/laptop market? Nope, there will always be a market for a low priced product.

<yawn>

And naturally you have some evidence to support this supposition?

You can also explain the bulging walls and other sides of structural collapse noted prior to the building's collapse?

Well, let's see. The people in the lander are going to be strapped down and all they could take a picture of in any event would be a view out the front of the lander.

The orbiter meanwhile is now ahead of the lander and the moment you fired the engines on the lander would rapidly move away. Short of a really high power telephoto, you couldn't take a meaningful picture of the lander from the orbiter during the de-orbit burn, nor any particular reason to do so.
After all I doubt some moron may years in the future would contend the whole thing was faked simply because they didn't take a picture just for him.

>And it is - of course - difficult and fuel consuming.

Yep, which is why weight was such an issue.

> The opposite is even more difficult and that is to restart and making the > rendezvous with the orbiter.

No more than any of the other times that spacecraft have met up in space, and from the moon it would actually be easier since you would have no air currents to throw you off your course during launch.

>This is next to impossible, because there is no assistance from the ground, >helping to correct the flight path (nobody there, on moon surface).

Don't need it. One craft knows exactly where they are, the other knows where they are, the rest is just math.

>And completely impossible is, to store the needed fuel in a single craft.
>(No gas station there, neither).

Actually with the small gravity well of the moon and no atmosphere it's quite possible.

See the gravity well of the Earth is some 22 TIMES greater than is the gravity well of the moon.

Here's a nice video with graphics to explain this to you.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=VBQHtF3WhMw

Further the lander doesn't even have to climb all the way out of that well. It only has to reach a very low orbit to meet up with the orbiter which then provides the rest of the thrust needed to return to Earth.

Heck, the orbiter's orbit was generally so low that it would have been within the atmosphere around the Earth. But since the moon has no atmosphere you could orbit at almost any height, as shown by the recent orbits just 13 miles up (ie 69,000 feet) below the service ceiling of many military aircraft.

So combine a shallow gravity well, with low orbit and what do you have?

Answer - you need very little delta V to land or launch for said orbit around a body without an atmosphere.

Once again, I will simply note that all you are showing is your ignorance of the mechanics of space flight, not any flaws in what NASA did, or didn't do.

Yep, on the apollo missions some metal used to contain the cabin pressure was no thicker than aluminum foil. It was all they needed, and every ounce was critical given how much fuel it took to get an ounce into orbit much less to the moon and back.

Actually the higher orbit would give you better MPG since you would survive for more orbits thus your cumulative distance covered for the fuel used increases.....

Look at voyager....now that's MPG..... :-)

You ignore the people who were told they could afford the houses they bought. People with a duty to be diligent--brokers, financiers, investment houses, all assured them that they deserved a good house and by heck they could afford one because they were given them a real bargain.

But if you're assured that you can afford it, who is the real culprit

When I bought my last house, I carefully constructed the budget. When I got to the financing stage, every carrier I spoke with pushed like mad to get me to take a non-traditional mortgage for far more than I'd considered, with variable interest, balloon payments, and 'creative' structures, all based on the assumption that 1) I'd be selling the property at a substantial profit within 5 years and 2) incomes always rise.

I resisted, and stayed with a 30 year fixed at the interest that I'd shopped around for. And was told that rate was no longer available, so the non-traditional was my only option.

They sold it hard. "You should buy the maximum amount of house you can possibly afford, and you can afford this." "You're upwardly mobile, you'll be selling to upgrade before the interest rates increase and make a bundle in the process." "You won't be in the house by the time the balloon comes due." Even going so far as to tell me that at my age, a traditional 30 year fixed would simply not be available. But that a 15 year ARM was a virtual certainty to be approved, at nearly 50% more than I'd planned to borrow.

I eventually found the mortgage I wanted, at the rate I wanted, and when things collapsed in the housing market, and the economy slowed, I had both equity and a payment I could manage. But it was a fight to the death to get a lender to agree to the traditional mortgage.

Few go into this kind of transaction with a fierce determination to do things his own way. Most I've encountered would be quickly swayed by both the temptation of more house than they thought they could afford, or the enticing finance opportunity when so reassured by the lending agency that the risk is small, and the benefits so great.

Now, I'm not, by a long shot, opposed to creative financing. I've been quite creative in financing my businesses. And a couple of really nice cars. But only in the short term, and only for small, manageable amounts of money. Specifically, so I'd be prepared as economic fortunes change.

So, though I'm hardly one of those 'invade Wall Street' protest types, who blames all ills in the universe of Man on the banking system, I can say that I've seen first hand some of the more underhanded, and manipulative behaviours that have led a lot of folk down a very turbulent river.

So, yes: Who is the culprit, indeed.

You are welcome to present evidence that computers purchased as Incorrect. Your a quarter behind.

You should take into consideration that some considerable number of non-Mac PCs are bought for non-personal computer use in industrial applications, etc.

Laptops are on the rise all over, silly.

(Actually its not my business and I'm not a 'conspiracy nut'.)

But you Americans could start to think about this question:
if it was in fact a fake, than certainly a few bucks were redirected into dark channels, but who has them and what purpose are they used for?

It's a LOT of money, that is (apparently) stolen from American taxpayers. Is that a particular patriotic behaviour? Certainly not.

There were a few other developments in the 60'th worth to mention: JFK assassination, 'hippies', Vietnam war ...

And there was - much later - 9-11. If that was a fake, too, than that wouldn't qualify as very patriotic neither.

Don't know, how to put all these pieces together and it's actually not my business, but I suggest you Americans try to do that.

I realize that the zealot in you will prevent you from grasping this, but...

...most people have no interest in building their own computers.

A very big deal.

1. Macs are almost solely used as personal computers where as generic PCs are also in other markets, but their sales are counted as being in the same bucket as Mac sales.

2. Mac sales have more than doubled in the last 5 years.

3. Mac sales in the more affluent parts of the world are now well over 10%. The people who develop software are more interested in customers who have the money to also purchase more software than the barebones personal computer purchasers in India and China.

Already done, and by retail motherboard sales of the top 5 makers, they constitute about 15% of total computer sales, and by the same measure Macs constitute some 3.7%.

If one is irrelevent, then the other is even more so.

Read your own source.

"Apple's Mac now 13% of US market as iPad snags dollars away from PCs"

It should be noted that the iPad is NOT a Mac, as such Mac sales do NOT constitute 13% of all PC sales.

I think you should consider following your own advice since I looked at Mac sales as specified while your source includes iPad sales and who knows what else as "Mac sales".

Don't blame me if your headliner writer can't tell the different between a Mac and an iPad, or that you're too stupid to notice the difference.

Somehow I doubt 1 quarter is going to significantly alter the numbers, my proofs, my conclusions, or bolster your BS assertion that Mac sales constitute 13% of all PC sales.

Agreed, but that should be included in the above numbers as long as they are actual personal computers and not computer based controls.

Yep, which doesn't refute my point.

However, they are often willing to buy component built systems because they are better or cheaper than named PC packages.
Quite a few people make a living supplying people with such systems customized to their specific desires.

Oddly, India is one of Mac's fastest growing markets.

Who gives a fuck, until you establish solid evidence that it actually occurred, not some hypothetical "if".

And the source was not counting iPads as Macs. It was noting that there is a class of non-Mac personal computers that people are buying less of:
netbooks; instead they're buying iPads.

In the personal computer sales area, that means fewer non-Mac PCs which, in conjunction with rising Mac sales, means a greater percentage of Macs.

The original sources was Gartner:

"Preliminary United States PC Vendor Unit Shipment Estimates for 3Q11 (Units)

Company 3Q11 Shipments 3Q11 Market Share (%)

HP 5,132,614 28.9
Dell 3,886,864 21.9
Apple 2,300,000 12.9"

<http://www.gartner.com/it/page.jsp?id=1821731>

And, yeah:

"Note: Data includes desk-based PCs, mobile PCs, including mini-notebooks but not media tablets such as the iPad. "

Which explains the headline just as I said.

You lose.

Actually, no. We know that the Mac computers sales have increased and outgrown the rest of the personal computer market for something like 22 straight quarters.

Most of my computers have been those. But the local stores that made my computers have all closed and not been replaced.

Ah yes, the old Liar Loans...

The only "qualification" for the loan was could you fog a mirror? If you

The overall desktop market is shrinking. But Apple's isn't, it just isn't growing as much as their laptop market is.

What you have is several people (real estate, financial lenders, etc..)
all wishing to get as much out of the deal as they possibly can. After all, it is up to you to make the payments, not them.

Or a fixed at a higher rate, I presume.......

In general, that is true.....however, not with a VRM.

"You're upwardly

Yeah.......uh huh.....

Even going so far as to tell me

Interestingly, they are still out there. Your estimate of the payment would be true. A $150K loan at, say 4.50% for 30 years would cost you $760 P&I while that same load at the same interest rate for 15 years would cost you $1147 P&I. Of course, your total cost of the loan would be a lot less. $273,600 for the 30 year and $206,460 for the 15 year.

I have never had a problem with that.

Yep, and now you have greed on everyone's part, not just the money and real estate portions.

Depends......could be the real estate folks, the lenders, the borrower, or any combination of them or all three.

Light duty use, traveling, you are just stuck with a laptop ...

But, try to load one up with massive storage, 32 gigs ram, excellent video card, etc. and it sucks the battery like pouring water out of a bucket ... some will try to go total laptop ... but if you need powerful computing power and support hardware, forget it ... plus, no real upgrade potential ... you have to trash it every year.

Except the conditions of a laptop are utterly different than a desktop.

Thus the different processors, etc.

In a desktop, power usage isn't a big deal, but in a laptop every watt used matters since it impacts battery life.
In a desktop, weight isn't an issue since it's not going anywhere, but in a laptop lighter is better as heavy laptops don't sell as well

In a desktop, you don't have to worry so much about size. A 3.5" drive is fine, but in a laptop you have to go with the smallest form factor you can to cut down on size and weight.
In a desktop you can make it more durable because size, weight and power usage aren't a big concern, a laptop on the other hand needs to shave everything to the absolute minimum and thus durability suffers.
In a desktop you can hold your CPU at a moderate temperature, by using a big heavy heat sink and having a rather large fan blowing air over it, in a laptop, you've only got so much room for the heat sink, and you can't make it any heavier than absolutely necessary, and you don't want to run the fan unless you absolutely have to (battery life), so generally your laptop CPU runs hot, damn hot, burning hot, which isn't so great for CPU life.

They are just different horses with utterly different requirements. The Desktop is the Clydesdale, while a laptop is a pony. Sure the pony can do most the stuff the Clydesdale can do....by working like hell doing it....but it's going to wear that pony out that much quicker. Size, weight, power use, heat, and so on DEFINE the limits of what a laptop is and can do. Thus laptops will always be more limited in nature than a desktop.

Not exactly a positive thing from the view point of anyone looking at buying their products.

Hmmm.... and component built systems work 4 times as well.

But an excellent one from theirs as long as it doesn't drastically reduce sales. With the charisma Apple seems to hold, I don't think that is much of a problem. It is like the folks who love to own Cadillacs. It doesn't cost much more to produce a Cadillac than it does Chevy, but compare the price and the cachet.

Simple, depends on how you are measuring the market. OEM laptop sales are up, but desktop component sales are also climbing. Seems more people are willing to build their own desktop rather than go to a vender.

So depending on how you look at the market it can be either expanding or shrinking depending on your yardstick.

If by "light duty use" you mean: "just about everything that the average person wants to do with a computer".

No, actually, you don't.

I'm typing this on my now nearly 4 year old MacBook Pro which does all I want it to do.

And most people don't need "powerful computing power" [sic]. They didn't need what passed for powerful 5 years ago and they certainly don't need the power that a high-end desktop has.

Since more and more people are buying them, how does it show that?

I think people look at what they actually get--a computer that works better for them--and then they look at what the price represents in terms of cost per day and they realize that the differential is well worth it.

No.

Because a Cadillac is still a POS GM product. A Mac actually does work better for ordinary people.

My business is supporting Mac users and I'm in serious trouble with my clients who have single machines or even small all-Mac networks, because they no longer need much of my support.

I went to visit one client the other day for a very small email issue and I realized that it had been a couple of YEARS since I last did any work for that company.

I'd say that for them, the Mac has worked out very well; not so well for me.

No. They do not.

Most people have neither the interest nor the knowledge to build their

Where does that mention "compiling and linking" on an individual

Most people don't need either the interest or the knowledge. They go to a local computer dealer, discuss their needs and the dealer will usually build it for them. Now, if that dealer is a place like Best Buy or Costco, yes, you will get a brand name product....if the dealer is an independent, then the system will most likely be built by the dealer him or herself.

Point: desktops are declining in market share; giving way to laptops.

Absolute hogwash!

Most commercial applications don't need the horsepower of an Atom powered netbook, let alone the extra power from a better, faster processor.

And btw, less powerful doesn't mean junk. But then you gamers don't understand anything but graphic speed and sound anyway...

Face to face contact was good at finding out what my needs and wants really were. Having a clone shop by mail order is as personalized as having a big name computer by mail order.

Don't you know? When people make choices different from my choices it doesn't mean they looked at the facts and picked what was best for them. No, it means that they have succumbed to the dark side and it "Barely acceptable" is a subset of "acceptable". I don't have a laptop, but I see people using commercial applications all the time without seeming to be annoyed at how unacceptable they are.

Admittedly, many have large monitors at home and at work which supplement their laptops. But those are part of their decision.
They can work on their Powerpoint presentation at the coffee house - I can't. They can look up the document they didn't think they were going to need that they got at work - in the middle of the night at home.

I'd have to agree. And honestly, if that mail order clone shop is cheaper on a per configuration basis, than most of the big names, I'd be running away from them. It just isn't all that much cheaper to buy the parts and put them together properly than it is to buy ready made, UNLESS the shop has really cheap labor or doesn't factor that in.

Then the question becomes who does the warranty when things don't go right, and who provides tech support if you need it? The guy that doesn't think his labor is worth much??

You can lay down big bucks for a computer that has top quality parts, or you can buy a $248.00 computer at Sears that has low quality parts.Like the elderly guy who works in the electronics department at the Sears store at Metrocenter Mall told me last March, Use it and then throw it away.

He is right too.
There are two grades of parts, Top Quality parts, and Low Quality parts.The Low Quality parts, that is why they can sell those computers so cheap.

Nope. Because it does it in a manner that is easier for ordinary people to handle. It works better.

And as long as they have you to help them out every few weeks, they'll be fine.

Yep, and for that very reason, why should they pay a lot more money for a machine that basically does the exact same job of a much cheaper PC?

IOW, you just shot yourself in the foot.

I mean you can make up a very decent system that will handle most people fine for much longer than 4 years, do it for a fraction of the price of a Mac, and will be vastly more upgradeable when they do need to make changes.

Sure they do, according to the standard you set above. Since at least 4 times as many people have them, then they most work well for four times as many normal people.

I've already shot that assertion down....so why do you keep repeating it?

Do you think if you say it enough times, that the facts will suddenly change?

Certainly it does.

By your standard of people buying them......they work 4 times as well, because 4 times as many people buy them.

Don't blame me because you don't understand your own standard.

Sorry, but somehow I don't see little tables (iPad and knockoffs) as being a adequate replacement for desktop and laptop systems. IOW, people are buying these new toys rather than upgrading their perfectly adequate desktop. I suspect this to be merely a phase and as the mobile market is saturated you will find a sudden drop off in sales.

However, I will agree that at the moment desktop sales are down, however, looking around I don't see a lot of people trading in their desktop for a laptop, but rather getting a laptop for use in conjunction with their desktop.

No, simply means that the recent sharp drop in price and increase in performance is allowing the desire for laptops to be fulfilled. (ie you removed the damn across the river and the lake is now filling). I think once the market saturates you will find quite a bit of difference because I know very few people who have traded in their desktop for a laptop. Most are simply buying a laptop for parallel use with their desktop. And many mobile devices (iPad) will never replace laptops or desktops and yet...they are a significant part of what you claim is a growing laptop market. Actually you should refer to it as the mobile market, to be precise.

If you know what you want, you can buy it from the big name companies too. The local make-it-yourself-shop's strength was in helping people find what they wanted.

Sorry if you found a bad supplier. Most will build systems to your exact specifications or tell you the general tradeoffs of different options and what you really need vs what you think you need.

Such as most people don't need a massive hard drive. Nor do you need a massive amount of memory for most applications. Depending on what you are doing you can also save a bunch of money on the video card. That allows you to put the money were it needs to go, in getting a better motherboard, CPU, and/or faster memory.

No, actually it is cheaper. It doesn't take very long to assemble a computer, and properly done you easily undercut the names by selective buying. Because the names don't get the discounts that arise as the hardware is superseded by newer tech. A computer they've had sitting in the warehouse for a year is not worth nearly as much as it was a year ago, but they've already paid the higher price for the hardware. A local supplier doesn't have this problem because they have a much quicker supply turnover and thus they don't lose the value in hardware at nearly the rate as the big players do. Plus the small supplier can take advantage of price breaks, sales, discounts, and so on, while the brand guys are limited in their ability to change the hardware configuration at the drop of a hat.

Nope, small suppliers can generally match much of what a name brand puts out simply because they aren't having to pay last year's price for hardware they are going to sell tomorrow. Just watch the price on any hardware. From what it was a year ago, to today. It generally will drop significantly. So you can either beat their price or match their price with superior hardware. However, there is a tradeoff, customer support particularly in driver updates, software conflicts/errors, and so on is left much more to the consumer that it might be with the name guys. However, a lot of hardware drivers now provide automatic updates from the maker as they become available.

Talk about morons!

Most people, when shopping, never get to the checkout with more in their basket -- quite amazing when you consider the morons who bought homes!

The real question here, is why was there a big bubble of morons purchasing homes? Is it possible they never heard, "BUYER BEWARE?"

roflol ... you just gotta love morons, it is always someone elses fault they did something stupid ... next, I expect a cop to walk up to one and ask them, "Why did u just shoot that person?" And, they reply, "He just got in the way of my bullet -- it wasn't my fault!"

Yeah, I have made some bad mistakes. One serious mistake is believing the average American knew if he could afford to purchase something, or not -- seems you have argued, and quite effectively, you are not, and that the average person on the street has an approx. equivalent IQ ... and more to point, that is someone elses fault that this is true!

But, now I have it down, don't let people keep proving me wrong, realize them for the complete morons they are ... I guess I have to thank you for that ... <chuckle>

Yup. That's true. But most of them make that decision blindly; never having actually used a Mac.

I've worked with, supported, sold, worked with, sold, and supported Macs since about 1985. In all that time, of the people who've switched from PCs to Macs, only one wanted to go back.

Having been in the business for many years, I call bullshit on your little story here.

The big boys buy in such massive quantities that they can buy current stuff for what the little guy pays for the last cycle of parts. And then have them built in factories with such cheap labor that any US builder can't even come close to matching. Labor far, far less than

In the end, they sell for less than the little guy that values his labor at all.

The advantage the small guys have is in custom configurations for specialty markets. Because of the very low volumes, it is difficult, if not impossible for the big guys to address that market except for some generic stuff. And usually for the specialty market, if you buy from the big boys, you have to overbuy to meet or exceed the spec you're needing.

Yeah, I suppose fools, such as yourself, could be confused by that ... however, those who realize that computers do nothing but crunch numbers, and that added speed, cycles, etc. will allow the crunching to be done faster will have little problem ...

But, thanks for the example of how easily morons will be confused, just

Uh, what makes you think that compiling/linking/trans-coding/crunching-byte-code/an-interpretive-language(such as basic)/etc. would be any different than any other app ran?

You getting confusing messages from aliens? Or, just beyond your range

As I already stated, ANY application which is aware can utilize the CPU and I already said I write my own apps, and for others ... I'd say you are grasping at straws and personal attacks ... but then, you have demonstrated nothing more ... everyone is a liar who has proven you wrong or your disagree with ... you are a little angry wanker that is all pissed of he is ignorant ... too bad fool.

Gesus ... you don't even have a clue how moronic that question is, do you? ... but you ask it as if you could understand the answer, obviously you could not ... better yet would be a real moronic question like, why is a GPU not a CPU? ... the answer, IT IS and, like heads, two processors are always better than one! roflol

Odd, I've done it and even figuring my labor at $30/hr I could still provide equal hardware at a lower price, or better hardware at the same price and tuned to the customers exact requirements rather than some cookie cutter.
Plus I know several people who make a living out of doing this and oddly enough they seem to be making a pretty decent living at it.

Well, I would agree to 'just math and knowing where things are'.

But that 'just math' is quite challenging, if you have only a handcranked 'computer' with a few k Ram.

And knowing where everything is is difficult, too. Today they have GPS, that would help a lot - if installed at the moon.

But without radar and satellite navigation things are VERY difficult.

Actually the gravity on Moon is very low. Agreed..

But you make the same mistake as the NASA guys. That is messing up 'inertia' and 'weight'.
In Germany we had pounds before, but now use the SI-system of units.
With this it is more easy to see: Weight is measured in Newton (in lbs.
in the US) and mass in kilograms (in lbs. in the US).

To accelerate a mass to a certain speed, the needed energy does not depend on weight, but on mass and the needed velocity. That velocity is orbital speed for the moon's gravitational field.

For Earth orbit you need much faster flight than you would need to stay in orbit around the moon, but nevertheless it is quite fast. On Earth it took a Saturn V rocket, to lift the craft into orbit. On the Moon it would take less fuel, but way more, than the few gallons, they had in the lander.

I don't think so, because the people in the world act in a different manners than you think. Knowledge follow an exponential curve. This means, a certain idea is passed to - say - two (different) friends per day - and so forth.
The idea spreads relatively slowly. But the last half of the Earth is covered in a day. (Not quite, but as simplification)

So certain ideas are not visible for a very long time, but this doesn't mean, they are not there. Only they are not visible.

But if the ideas have their own value and are is some respect 'better' (as explanation), than they sooner or later outrun the competitors.

In the subjects you call 'conspiracies', there are several ideas, that seem to be more 'true' (hence: 'truthers'), what gives these ideas advantages over official explanations.

The 'truthers' will inevitably outrun official fairy tails, because truth has advantages in explaining things.

You claimed YOU needed a faster GPU in order speed up YOUR compiling and linking, John...

...and now you're producing link after link that doesn't support that claim.

Not really. Apollo 13 proved that all they needed was one fixed point in space...and the Earth itself provided that.

Sorry, but the bulk of the work was predone, the only thing they had to deal with was the final adjustments once they got within visual range.

Not very low, just low. However, the gravity well is MUCH lower than the Earth's.

I haven't said anything else. Are you trying to talk so much that people will miss when you don't refute the fact pointed out to you?

Ok, let's see your math.

I mean if you know they needed more, then clearly you have calculated all this out and know exactly how much they would need and whether they could have that much on the lander.

So let's see your work.

----> Insert mathematical proof here.

Here I will even aid you with the specifications for the mass, amount of fuel, type of fuel, specific impulse, thrust provided, available delta-V, and so on.

On the other hand, if we have policies that don't take into account human nature, we should be prepared to live with the result.

If a business mandates changing passwords that are too difficult for most people to memorize - it should be prepared for them being written down on post-it notes.

If salesmen get bonuses for selling products you cannot deliver, be prepared for business problems.

If bankers make short term money by selling mortgages over conservative projected values (then pass them to others), expect a mortgage breakdown.

Is it good for the country when stupid (or smart) people lose their homes?

We shouldn't have policies that say "it's their fault, let them suffer" - especially not when the whole country has to suffer along with them.

Don't some of the big guys have Just In Time production? If I go to a web site and enter all of my specifics, does it find my exact computer in a warehouse - or does it assemble my computer to match my criteria?

Of course, both types of computer makers need to warehouse parts. It's expensive to stock a video card it might not sell. But a large plant can afford to have a rarely sold card more than a small shop.

Dell was literally built on the idea of just-in-time throughout its supply chain and production line. Basically when you call Dell they are doing a build sheet for your computer.

Other mfgs watched in awe as Dell honed that to a fine point. It was Dell's biggest claim to fame! Of course, now the profits are really poor in the wintel side of the computer builders and it makes that even more important.

I worked for a couple of small computer shops and we stocked very little. We targetted small business and schools and did very little business with the consumer market. We found that by carrying just a very few parts in stock, and ordering in for overnight delivery to us to be a better way to do things.

Out new sales tended to be bulk sales, so we ordered parts for those builds as needed. Later we moved from building our own to reselling Compaq and other product lines. It was just a better way to go.

I can't believe they can do that and get away with it. I MUST be

Crooks are NEVER to be tolerated, even it they have tricked and abused the unwitting and ignorant, and the mistakes of the unwitting and ignorant are NEVER to become the norm ... and not even if the majority

Actually, I claimed that software can be made aware of the GPU and utilize it to speed up the processing power of ANY application, it can, it has been, and my claims are true.

I also claimed I use software which uses these methods, and I gave an example of software which can be obtained, by anyone, to demonstrated the power of "what happens" when those methods are applied.

You have engaged in a personal attack and attempt to deceptively create an argument to aid you ... duh! Worse yet, you are betting you will find morons to assist and support your efforts ... and make me appear answerable to you -- go abuse your wife ... obviously she must be a

My old buddy came over here this morning with his pickemup truck.(Blueberry, [doggy] your boyfriend is here! I had to put doggy in a room and close the door, doggy was climbing the walls, trying to get out) He said, you have to make up your mind if you really want to get rid of that office desk, my wife definetly wants it.I told him, Hell yeah, lets get it on your truck!

Old vintage/antique wooden office desk I bought at Goodwill years ago.A little round label on the back of the wide top drawer says, Standard Furniture Co.Herkimer,New York.I think that office desk dates back to at least the 1930s, most definetly before World War Two, I think so.There is an old wooden office chair about the same age as the office desk (with two arm rest on it and castor wheels) I bought that chair later on at Goodwill.I told him you can have the chair too.He said he might get the chair later on.

Yeah, your buddy Rick Dell could fix it up and charge $12,000 for it.Rick Dale proves there is a fool born every minute.

Still being in a miserable condition after achieving your claims is not a real achievement ... others opinions may vary ... mac sucks for industrial/scientific/production uses ... and playing home computer games ... end of story.

Just look around here, the mac does fine for newsgroups ...

In California, you can walk into any Best Buy, Fry's, etc. and ask them how many PC's and motherboards they sell a day ... then stop by the apple store on your way home and notice the employees look like the maytag repairman (the most loneliest guy in town) unless they having a new "iPhone rip off day."

Yes, apparently on "liars", such as myself, are accusing him of label worship! Krist, I need another good personal attack just to bring me to my senses! Ya' suppose?

All I do is message, phone, locate addresses and uses maps GPS as a guide -- when I need directions, lookup something on the web (in an emergency -- screen is hard to read at my age), post pictures up to family facebook pages at family events, newsgroups/email when away from computers, take pictures when no better camera is available, make audio notes to myself/others, listen to podcasts of infowars.com and Alex Jones, watch a youtube.com flick that someone wants me to view, etc.

My 4G LG android phone more than handles the uses which are forced on me ... and it was cheap. I am always happy to get home in from of my dual 32 inch screens ...

LOL! I guess all those reports about the Apple Store's being extremely busy that we see everywhere except from you, must be fiction huh? :)

Around here, BestBuy does fine selling PCs, but components other than external HDs and such, not so much.

Absolutely in agreement, my 10 inch notebook is tiny volkwagon (like I say, all I need is a TX/RX cell unit and phone software), my 3/4 tower case holding the most uptodate components is a Peterbilt, a very sporty Peterbilt, but still ...

Yours, load it up and give it a spin, it is free ... http://secondlife.com/

Minimum system requirements:
http://secondlife.com/support/system-requirements/

Client/viewer downloads:
http://secondlife.com/support/downloads/ (Mac/Linux versions available here)

Once in world, hang out in Sandbox Island, Sandbox Cordova, or Sandbox Goguen -- here you will find serious "griefers" to test your hardware and video to the max ...

When you can manage them, take a trip to the weapons testing sandbox ... and when you want to die ... go to Rausch!

Be careful, it can become addicting ... because of low system requirements, this is a good entry level "game" for older/aging computer users ...

Plus the big name gets its parts a lot cheaper due to volume discount.
Are you going to give a hobbyist the same price on a motherboard that you give a big name? No.

Many folks who buy name brand (like from a Costco) will usually stop by a local computer shop to fix any troubles rather than to send his laptop back to the source.

That depends on the hardware. For example, I'm not in the PC business anymore but on modems, routers, etc.. a person can go to a Best Buy and get one for less than the computer shop owner pays for it. Where the shop owner shines is in custom building. When certain configurations are built to fill a particular niche for a particular customer. At least that is how it was....way back when....

LOLOLOLOLOLOLOL

You can, can you? You can ask a major retailer for its sales figures and they'll just give them to you? Would you mind catching that on video for us?

And Apple stores are absolutely booming. The one in New York does more dollars per square foot than Tiffany's for goodness sake.

Perhaps, perhaps not. You don't know what I think.

My point was that your "truther" ideas are not unique to you, and in most cases, didn't even start with you.

No one has claimed any different.

Yes, but so far, the facts don't fit the conspiracy theories.

Only in the minds of those who have trouble handling the truth.

Well, that happens (and it hasn't yet) it will be interesting....but so far the truth remains and conspiracy theories are like weeds. If you don't like the one you just saw, wait a bit and another will show up.

Back when, it was that way. Now most of the little mom and pop shops depend on their service business to make a living as sales at the current profit margins, aren't where it is at.

And getting a good salesman is tough when they can't make good commissions.

Sorry, but that's asking me to do the work of proving your claim.

Mac OS X requirements:

Mac OS X 10.5: check; Mac OS X 10.6.8 actually

1.5GHz Intel processor: check; 2.4GHz Intel Core 2 Duo actually.

Graphics card: Radeon9200 or above, or NVidia GeForce 2 or 4.

My MacBook Pro: GeForce 8600M GT.

That's only about 10 times faster than the GeForce4 series.

Well, I'm a little too lazy, but a rough calculation is possible:

There is the Tsiolkovsky rocket equation velocity_final=v_exhaust* ln(mass_start/mass_finish)

V_end= 2200 m/s * ln (4547 kg/(4547-2353) kg) that is :

v_end approx. 1603 m/s

this is an estimated calculation without gravity.

the final velocity is reduced by delta v = g_moon * (time of engine running)

Don't know that number (time_ engine)

Maybe 100 seconds (???)

makes:
delta v = 1.6 m/sï¿½*100 s=160 m/s

What gives a rough estimate for the final velocity of the landers ascending stage of v_end = 1440 m/s.

Now the orbital velocity had to be compared. But I don't have the data and actually I'm too lazy to find them out. But usual orbits should be a little less than escape velocity, what is v_orbit_escape = 2380 m/s.

V_end is a rough estimate ('thumb times pi'). For better calculations someone with more experience in rocket science is needed.

I cannot even tell you, if the ascent stage is fast enough or not. But my intuition tells me, it is not.

Greetings

Thomas

So a computer specifically designed for PEOPLE to use allegedly "sucks" at industrial and production uses, huh? Wow. Quite the revelation.

Fact: scientists are a big market for Macs.

As for the rest, where people have a reasonable income, Macs sell more than 10% of all the computers out there.

Like tobacco, alcohol and marijuana (probably coffee too) are referred to as "gateway drugs", let us hope that the tablets and other toys become "gateway computers." Introducing all to the true value of adequate computing machines!

A mosquito is dangerous and annoying in the bight light of day ... 100x more so in the depth of night, when awaking one from a sound slumber ...

You need a carbon dioxide generator attached to the UV kill trap, for it to be effective, at least one way mosquitoes locate prey is through the carbon dioxide released in their respiration ... I used to see the Co2 bottles and attachments at better home and garden supplies ... but then, I just never see a mosquito anymore ... unless, high and deep in the rugged sierras ... seems they still survive there! Yes, it was the same way back when, but that wasn't what was being discussed was it.

Most of the ones that I knew didn't have a separate marketing entity. It was owner-do-all with maybe a couple of shop people or someone to go on site.

I'll also point out that in the 60s there were no handheld calculators that did various algebraic and trigonometrical functions.
You had slide rules for 3 meaningful digits and log tables for more meaningful digits.
And computers were mainframes that had very few real-time applications where you could dynamically change the data set on the fly, and immediately recalculate. Not to mention that their processing speed was slower than a cheap $5 calculator you pick up at Walgreens or Wal-Mart.

I remember when the mainframe group where I worked were jealous that they had to run a compile overnight, but the "PC" group did ours with a simple

That was also true of the "mini" computers like the PDP series.
Although many ran compiled software like COBOL and FORTRAN, some ran interpreted software, like BASIC, APL, etc
In many cases, there were libraries of compiled routines that could be called, and the interpreted portions were simple the main logic like making a series of calls to compiled routines.
I also remember the territorial fights between the mainframe, mini, and desktop crowds..
I spent a lot of time as a consultant mediating separation of tasks and responsibilities to optimize operations.

I was in Engineering School in the Early seventies.
My Texas Instrument calculator cost me over $1000 at about 40% MSRPl because I was a "loss leader" sale.
I was not allowed to use during my exams, because it would have been unfair to those who couldn't afford buying one. Slide rules or Log Tables only.

What if these 'theories' are in fact true. Not every one of course, but one of them. What would it tell you about the people in the government? No good things, I guess.

Hope everything comes to a good end. But there are dangers and that is the possibility of massive violence in your country.

This could not be beneficial for the rest of the world. My suggestion would be, that Americans try to solve their issues, possibly in a peaceful manner.

Greetings

Thomas

Maybe you should spend a bit of time studying some comparative history
Let's say comparing the US and Germany over the last 100 years
Do tell us which of the 2 countries has had more violence against it's own people and against it's neighbors over the last 2 centuries
And how many people died because of those actions

Before you ignorantly tell others what they should be doing, I strongly suggest that you make sure your own house is in order.

How does he think ballistic calculations were done back then? American warships were getting first shot hits on a moving target form a moving gun platform in WWII! The moment guns could fire other than direct fire ballistics became an issue and ballistic tables were generated - by hand.

I reckon one day this week I will be slidin East on Highway 80 to

I haven't claimed to be a rocket scientist. I'm totally happy with an rough estimate. I could do it better, for sure, but do not want.

The reason is, that to figure this out is not my business - as I have written.

You gave me that link and demanded to tell, what's wrong with the Apollo program. I made a few comments to the picture on that page.

Than you wanted a mathematical proof, that the lander could not reach the orbiter with the fuel in the ascent stage.

I gave you a short version and explained, that better calculations are certainly possible, but I don't want to provide them. You could do that, if you like or ask somebody. It is not THAT difficult. (Maybe there are simulators already or Mathematica packages.)

It is certainly more interesting for American people than for me as a German. The reason is, that the Apollo program would allow to understand, how your government actually acts.

Greetings from Berlin

I do not agree. Do you know, why 'conspiracy theories' bear this name?
The claim is actually, that there are hidden forces, that try to manipulate the society by hidden means.

Since they are hidden, these issues are not openly discussed.

Well this is in fact true and everything you can do in reality is local.

What you have isn't even a rought estimate that applies. You simply threw some stuff up there, came up with some answers, but didn't use the data from the apollo program, which it should be noted I was even nice enough to lead you to by the hand, much less show that the results produced proved that a landing and take-off physically could not occur given those conditions. You simply flopped around trying to put together an argument.

Free hint: If you're going to say someone else is lying, then you need to make sure you have your ducks in a row and can PROVE IT.

All you've shown is that you are an empty headed conspiracy theorist, with lots of notions, but no facts, no proof, and from all evidence absolutely NO desire to find out what the facts really are.

You are absolutely wrong!
The rocket equation is a method to calculate the final velocity of a single staged rocket.

The ascent stage would fit to 'rocket', even if doesn't look like. It had - of course - only one stage.

The rocket equation ignores gravity. The moon has low gravity, what makes this equation even more usable.

The precise orbit of the orbiter I could figure out, but that would be
'work', while typing stuff into the UseNet qualifies as 'leisure'.

So I decided, I don't want to do that. This decision is absolutely my right and nobody could hold me responsible, because I refuse to calculate the orbit of the command module of Apollo 11.

What I seen was bill gates become very obstinate and think that that there was no need for video as powerful as the computers ... MAC video graphic artists where forced into being ... now that windows went ahead and provided the supporting software/driver support, there is no finer video than you will find on PC's ... and the leading reason all no. one games usually only run on the PC, and windows ... to transcode them for another architecture/video support cuts too many capabilities from the game.

You and I agree here, probably different reasons though, the mafia and criminals, tired of spending large amounts of time in prison, infiltrated the public servant offices of the USA ... they are paid, protected and supported by the criminal rich elite ... and perhaps those too ignorant to realize what is happening.

However, for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction ... the American citizens are waking up ...

Windows didn't "go ahead" and do that, John. The companies that build the graphics cards provide the drivers.

As for your "too many capabilities from the game" claim...

...let's see a concrete example.

Not everything you disagree with is BS.

More importantly, who uses which computer operating system is really about as unimportant an argument as things get. The output is the same.
The output is what matters. How one gets there has to do with choices based on priorities intrinsic to the individual. Your priorities and your choices create no incumbency on anyone but yourself.

Further which O/S is better depends on application and the users' needs. Again, only the output matters.

And PC World did a very interesting article a year or so ago, so you can, in fact, look it up, (and they did an update again, this year,) in which they compared Apples to PC's point for point on performance, and found that to purchase the same performance that comes standard in an Apple, a PC user would have to spend, while buying the most cost effective solutions available at the time, nearly $1000 more than the price of the Apple. And they found this to be true of notebooks AND desktops.

So, again, not everything you disagree with is BS.

And your needle is still stuck.

No, you are completely incorrect. Windows supports the driver architecture that the hardware manufacturer must write their driver's to comply with.

And anyone can. They may not want to, but they can.

Again, Microsoft doesn't write the drivers: the hardware manufacturers do.

Again, you prove yourself a fool, the high level drivers make the video calls to the devices ... the hardware manufactures simply have to translate those into assembly ... the same calls are made, but the firmware of the manufacturer translates those to fit its' hardware ... ATI will be much different the NVIDIA ... but windows makes the same calls from its high level driver(s) ... and, windows must provide what the game developers need, the instructions and calls, or it doesn't even get off the ground. Just because a video card slot exists on a motherboard DOES NOT mean windows has to support it ...

It is the windows kernal which runs the games ... but hey, glad to be able to help you dispel your ignorance! :-)

The best OS will be the one which supports the full spectrum of uses, can be used by a child in elementary school as well as the physicist at CERN, encompassing the entertainment industry, fast fourier transform, etc. And, the OS which runs of the most up-to-date, is updated the most frequently, used by the largest number (data sharing without translation), etc. simply sinks it home. Yeah, they compared a mid-power PC to a MAC ... my nephews blows them out of the water ... and, if it the article I am viewing, the comparison is to a 400 Mhz processor on the PC, and single core to boot!

The PC is superior to MAC in many if not most ways ... but that can ONLY be appreciated by the people which run them ... or, simply, I would not ask a garbage collector for "his opinion" ...

Fact is, soon as you buy a MAC, you are going to find out here are tons of applications and hardware which is not supported and is beyond your use ... ever ...

People are the ONLY importance ... the computer is just a tool ...

Funny, I see it claimed the more intelligent are the ones doing all the voting ... that poor ignorant slobs don't vote ...

The state of the union really doesn't speak well for them, if so ... indeed, at this point I am starting to think it might be better to claim you don't vote, and blame all this on "the slobs!"

If that crapola you just posted was true, we'd all be using it. But Windows and most other desktop OS's represent a set of compromises so they can do what they do in a mostly good fashion.

There are and continue to be, other OS's that are better suited to some particular task but they don't get in the news and aren't used by many.

Tell you what, this will get you started on who sets the specs and defines the driver:

You, again, seem to have a real problem with semantics ... usually a problem for those with no or inadequate educations.

The person/people who "build a bridge" are those completing the design, engineering and plans ... so it is with anything ... it is not "the guy

Last week, the Census Bureau released its list of covered jurisdictions that will be required to provide bilingual ballots for the upcoming 2012 elections. This list includes 248 counties in 25 states. The states of Florida, California, and Texas will be required to foot the burdensome bill to print foreign-language ballots for the entire state because they surpass the threshold of 5 percent of voting age citizens, or 10,000 such citizens (whichever is less), who are deemed limited-English proficient (LEP).

Is your county on the list? Check now >
http://www.ofr.gov/OFRUpload/OFRData/2011-26293_PI.pdf

The Voting Rights Act (VRA) of 1965 was originally enacted to prohibit state and local governments from denying or abridging the right to vote "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," a right guaranteed by the 15th Amendment. But in 1975, Congress greatly expanded the VRA's original intent by inserting special protections for "language minorities" –that is, American Indians, Asian Americans, Alaskan Natives, and citizens of Spanish Heritage. Although the bilingual ballot provisions were originally intended to be temporary remedies, Congress renewed them in 1982, 1992, and again in 2006 for another 25 years.

Congress should REPEAL bilingual ballots for these reasons:

•Protection for limited English proficient voters already exists. Current law states: "Any voter who requires assistance to vote by reason of blindness, disability, or inability to read or write," including limited English proficient persons, "may be given assistance by a person of the voter's choice."

•They contradict current naturalization law and undermine assimilation. Since 1907, Congress has required candidates for naturalization to demonstrate "an understanding of the English language, including an ability to read, write, and speak English in ordinary usage in the English language."

•They are unfunded mandates and a growing financial burden on affected states and counties. Los Angeles County, for example, paid $3.3 million in 2002 to provide materials in Spanish, Chinese, Vietnamese, Japanese and Filipino.

•They are wasteful. The Government Accountability Office (GAO) reported to Congress in 1986 that there was widespread evidence that multilingual ballots and election materials are barely used in practice.

•They increase the risk of errors and fraud. Multilingual ballots have resulted in a series of embarrassing errors. In 2000, six polls in heavily Chinese precincts of Queens, N.Y. had “Democratic” translated in Chinese as “Republican.” Bilingual ballots also increases the risk that non-citizens will knowingly or unknowingly vote illegally, and increases the risk of voter intimidation, manipulation, and fraud.

•The American people are opposed to multilingual ballots. A June 2011 Rasmussen poll found that 58 percent of likely voters including 60 percent of independent voters oppose printing ballots in languages other than English.

There is no justification for this absurd, arbitrary and budget busting provision, especially since it means that every municipality within a covered jurisdiction must provide multilingual election materials—even if everyone there speaks English!

TAKE ACTION!

Was your county on the list?

If so, here are TWO things you can do to help fight back:

1. If your county is on the list, call your local county clerk's office NOW!
Urge your county clerk to consider bringing a lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the bilingual ballot provisions contained in Section 203 of the Voting Rights Act!

2. Call and email your Congressman NOW and tell him to co-sponsor H.R. 1164, the National Language Act of 2011, if he has not yet signed on in support. This bill would repeal the bilingual ballot mandate for federal elections in addition to making English the official language of the U.S.!

I don't know, my wife is fascinated with the algorithms exploiting the chaos theory and the "unreal number set" (An imaginary number is any number that is the product of a real number and the square root of negative one (-1)).

She doesn't think the printing out and giving away of TONS of these things is a wasted ... indeed, "they" actually have the gonads to call it "art!"

I call it a waste of ink ... but I do see trees, snowflakes, elves ears, corn cobs, mushrooms, leaves, demon faces, etc. in the drawings ... and I don't have to smoke pot to see 'em, that is a plus!

I'm sorry, but when you really don't know what you're talking about, you should just shut up.

Create a video card, write drivers for it according to Windows published requirements and it will work...

...Microsoft doesn't have anything to do with it other than certifying the drivers after they've been written.

I never said that Microsoft doesn't set specs or defining things.

> You, again, seem to have a real problem with semantics ... usually a

"YOU can build a driver using the Visual Studio development environment, or YOU can build a driver directly from the command line using the Microsoft Build Engine (MSBuild). To build drivers for Windows Developer Preview, Windows 7, and Windows Vista, use Visual Studio and MSBuild. To build drivers for Windows XP, YOU must use the Windows 7 WDK and the Windows Build Utility (Build.exe)."

Do you see that word that I've capitalized? To whom do you think Microsoft is referring with the word "YOU" in that paragraph?

Your analogy is so flawed I cannot even begin.

The common people in your country - like in mine - are 'milked' by self-proclaimed elites. If not by them, there are the criminals, that demand their share.

The common people cannot do very much, but certain things are possible. I think, if people start to care about their own affairs and try to fix things, that are actually in reach, than this could add up to a generally better world.

I mean things like rubble in the streets or the 'pollution' a person applies to his environment. This could all be reduced to make way for more healthy developments.

There are lots of things, people - unknowingly - do, that symbolize death or destruction. This is, what makes crowds look like they do. Lots of music for example is full of criminal themes, praises the use of drugs and tell youngsters, how to mess up relationships. Films, comics, computer games all suggest, that criminal life is more 'fun'. Interiors, tattoos, jewellery, clothing are often full of skulls and demons. This is all sick to some extend and should be reduced.

An individual gives a more positive appearance, if the person is not full of alcohol or sedatives, kind of washed and dressed in fresh clothes.

Now imagine, that all the people would do that: live happy and healthy and try to imagine, how a city would look like. Certainly different, I presume.

Once people realize, that they can live a better life and try to achieve this, the society would slowly change. This could free energies, that enable people to take back control upon the own affairs.

The thread upon the common people will fall together once they realize, that the government belongs to them and not the other way round. This could be achieved, if the little officials are closer bound to laws and small crimes by officials are actually prosecuted. All these things are already illegal, like corruption, inside trading, drug or arms trafficking, blackmailing, violence..

This is just the opposite of what those elites want, since they want to milk the common people.

IOW, screw figuring out the facts.

Absolutely, you have every right to be as stupid and ignorant as you chose....but don't confuse that with being informed.

So basically, you've got a lot of hot air....but nothing to support it.

Typical conspiracy theorist....long on talk, short on facts.

Nope, I simply don't buy his bullshit without proof, just as I wouldn't buy yours.

If you throw something out there, then you need to be able to back it up with some support if called on it.

If you can't then expect to be treated in the manner your deserve.

When World War Two was over, America sent some big machines to Germany/Europe.The machines were used for grinding up that rubble, the ground up rubble was mixed into new concrete/rebuilding.

I have a Curta hand crank Calculator.I bought it for $88.00 at an Indian (India) store in Saigon,Vietnam in 1964.

I think that the state of Louisiana is running afoul of federal law with this one. Does it not say right there on the money: "This note is legal tender for all debts, public and private?" Does this not mean that legally one cannot refuse payment in cash?

I usually do not use the term 'conspiracy'.
Conspiracy is a crime in anglo-saxon law, where two or more people conspire, to harm somebody by illegal means.

This does not require 'hidden means' or secrecy. It just requires more than one person. 'Conspiracy' is among these extremely strange laws, you have in America.

Don't know, if that's true or not, but I have seen a book about it, entitled 'Forbidden to shower naked' (Actually in German 'Nacktduschen streng Verboten').
http://www.buecher.de/shop/recht/nackt-duschen-streng-verboten/leuthner-roman/products_products/detail/prod_id/24889734/

I cannot really imagine, it might be a crime to be naked in the bathroom.

Conspiracy is making the preparation more a crime than actually committing it. This is extremely strange, in my eyes.

But maybe 'crime' is enough and hidden means plus involvement of government or other officials.

'Theory' is the other misnomer, because theory means a hypothesis, that had not been proven wrong. It is actually the best you could get, according to the scientific method.

I acknowledge your desire and attempt to change the subject.

I can only wonder why you don't wish to talk about the 'theory' aspect of it.

Perhaps because it hits too close to home?

I acknowledge your ignorance of the English language as well, since a conspiracy does NOT have to be a crime.

Then I take it you're not American, and that you think that a conspiracy can only occur under American law.

Let's just acknowledge you're bat shit crazy.

No, I don't say so and I don't mean it.

What you call 'conspiracy' is in German 'Verschwï¿œrung'.
This term comes from 'Schwur', what is 'oath' in English.

The theory (actually the correct term would be 'hypothesis') is, that there are groups - connected around the globe - through a system of oath and hidden connections.

Actually it is a known fact, that such systems do exist. These are (predominantly) masons, jesuits and mobsters. Also the SS of the Nazis used such means. But many other groups have oath, even if not hidden.
Only the SS had the habit to kill those, that would not follow the oath, while e.g. the boy scouts don't.

Now Kennedy addresses in his speech, that these conspiracies would exist as wast international system (shortly before he got killed).

So the idea itself has some merits. Only it is very hard to prove, since the system is hidden and whistle-blowers get killed.

Actually I wouldn't think, that the jesuits would kill somebody, that wants to leave, what leaves Nazis and mobsters as possible perpetrators.

Where have got that from?

Do Muslims have an oath?

I think, 'faith' is something you have, hence could - maybe - give it up or loose it, but cannot leave.

Out of curiosity, were you in QSO with an operator in the UK on (IIRC) 7035khz last night around 0600-0700 UTC? Don't know if it was you or not, but someone on one of the Web SDRs I was fooling around with last night made a very similar comment.

Could have been on 7015, now that I think of it... Can't remember the frequency exactly, but am quite certain it was 40m.

Actually I did. I have started a thread about the content of the Koran.
To me it has a different meaning. It addresses a 'chosen people' and demands to keep promises given and to obey the law.

The Islam is related - like Christianity - to the same area of the world, where Judaism came from. Some people claim, that Mount Sinai is in Saudi Arabia. This would mean, that the Saudis are actually the (biblical) Jews.

This would fit to 'chosen people', but would also mean, that 'faith', as addressed in the Koran, would include Christianity and Judaism as well, because these three religions are in fact the same, only different forms and of different age.

There is this usual misconception of the mixing of faith and some sort of collective. Groups of people, like nation or tribes, could easily have different faith, but form still such a group. For example Germany is now (after Nazis and the devastating 30 years war) more or less tolerant about different faith. Actually they do not care very much and you may believe whatever you like, but are still a German citizen. Same in America.

Saudis are on the other side of the spectrum and have the most brutal system thinkable. I personally think, that this special kind of violence has no roots in believe whatsoever, but these people would be as brutal as they behave in any circumstances.

So you cannot blame the Koran e.g. for the punishment of stoning. (Actually the old testament mentions it as well.) But you can blame the people, what they do with the words of a prophet.

'Conspiracy' is a legal term in anglo-saxon law. The German StGB (Strafgesetzbuch ~> 'book about law of punishment') has no such rule, because what is punished is what you do and not intentions.

A promise (much less an oath) given to do something illegal is void and worthless according to BGB (Bï¿œrgerliches Gesetzbuch ~> civil law book).

So an oath given to conspirators is worthless, hence cannot be prosecuted. It is just hearsay or 'thought-crime'. Non of such things are subject to prosecution in German law.

But this does not mean, that conspiracies are not possible in Germany.
The thing itself is of course a criminal offence. If a group of people does illegal things, where any part of the doings is not illegal, only the outcome is harmful, than they commit a collective crime.

These crimes occur and are subject to prosecution, only the terms are different. We would speak of building (or supporting) of a criminal group (Bildung einer kriminellen Vereinigung) or assisting in a crime (Begï¿œnstigung) - or various other paragraphs. Even planning could be a crime, but that is also an activity.

My impression about 'strange American laws' is, they are useless leftovers and nobody ever cared to sort them out. Some of these laws are so extremely strange, that nobody could possibly mean them seriously.
But its bad to keep such things, because the clearness about whats allowed and what not, gets lost.

Same in civil laws in America. Civil law is the set of regulations, that formulate the rights of citizens against other citizens (what we call BGB). That are things like how a contract should look like or what could be demanded or not. These regulations are very important, but do not really exist in the US. You have a different (strange) system of using former decisions of courts as 'quasi-law'. That is a very impractical form of legislation and produces immense costs and generates a lot of uncertainty.

An even more severe fault of the American legal system is, in my eyes, that criminal and civil laws should be the same across the nation, hence the US federal government should provide usable laws for all of the country and not every single state.

The project was established by University of California physics professor Richard Muller, who was concerned by claims that established teams of climate researchers had not been entirely open with their data.

He gathered a team of 10 scientists, mostly physicists, including such luminaries as Saul Perlmutter, winner of this year's Nobel Physics Prize for research showing the Universe's expansion is accelerating.

Funding came from a number of sources, including charitable foundations maintained by the Koch brothers, the billionaire US industrialists, who have also donated large sums to organisations lobbying against acceptance of man-made global warming.

"I was deeply concerned that the group [at UEA] had concealed discordant data," Prof Muller told BBC News.

"Science is best done when the problems with the analysis are candidly shared. Our biggest surprise was that the new results agreed so closely with the warming values published previously”

I wonder whether FR has closed its offices today as it did last May.
I haven't been listening, so I don't know whether they're running any live shows that might be replaced with taped repeats today. Mr. Camping is still off the air due to his stroke, right? I did find this posting from yesterday:

http://www.familyradio.com/x/message.html

But it focuses on how some of your loved ones may have been saved before the cutoff date of May 21 even if you see no evidence of it, and only makes passing mention of today being the date when all that salvation will bear fruit. Nothing on the home page except some scrolling Bible

There might not be another president and the president we have now could become our dictator. All he needs to do is pull off another false flag and this time impose marshal law.

Rough justice. You've all seen the phone camera pics and videos.

http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2051361/GADDAFI-DEAD-VIDEO-Dictator-begs-life-summary-execution.html

They are horrific, but you can't have much sympathy for a murderous monster like Gaddafi. He got what he deserved - especially since he was given a plethora of opportunities to safely leave Libya and live out his days in comfortable exile. The choice to end like this was his.

So Bush got Saddam and Zero will claim he got Gaddafi - even though Marco Rubio was right in observing that it was the Brits and French. The contrast in how they were "gotten" is, however, instructive in the extreme.

That contrast is between the humane calm professionalism of American soldiers pulling Saddam Hussein out of his spider hole, and the bloody frenzy of ragtag Libyan rebels pulling Moammar Gaddafi out of his drain pipe.

This is the difference between civilization and barbarism, between democracy and mobocracy. It is tempting to say the difference is reflected in that between the Tea Party and Occupy Wall Street.

Would you borrow a lot of money to become ignorant?

Two of the most popular demands of the Occupy Wall Street protesters are for "free college education," and "debt forgiveness" for student loans.

The autophagous orgy of College students are not among those whom Marxist revolutionary Frantz Fanon (1925-1961) called the "Wretched of the Earth." These protesters demonstrate their "youthful idealism" by demanding free stuff for themselves.

The collegians do have a beef. Many are discovering that despite their very expensive educations, they are essentially unemployable. (The unemployment rate among 2010 college grads is slightly higher than the national unemployment rate is now.)

http://www.realclearmarkets.com/articles/2011/10/20/the_economic_travails_of_generation_o_99319.html

Perhaps this is because their very expensive educations taught them so little about the economic system they are protesting against. New York Magazine discovered, http://www.americanthinker.com/blog/2011/10/osw_demonstrators_clueless_about_taxes_and_government_economic_policy.html

when it polled 50 protesters in Zuccotti Park, that most have no clue what the rich pay in taxes, how the federal government spends its money, or what the SEC is supposed to do.

The real villains in our economic crisis are those in the political class who pandered to the voter by promising more in benefits to be paid for by others. As more and more people lose their jobs, the demand for government payments grows, making the situation worse and worse. The U.S. government is spending roughly 40 percent more than it is taking in.

The simple fact is that the amount of explicit and implicit debt that the United States and other governments have incurred cannot and will not be paid back in full. The political class will try to cure the debt mess with inflation, price controls, tax increases and confiscation, but it will only make things worse.

As more and more jobs and homes are destroyed by the debt crisis, the ranks of the revolutionaries will grow until, finally, the new "peasants" realize that the rich are gone and it is the political class who is responsible for the mess.

As Mr. Obama and many liberal Democrats embrace the Wall Street protesters, I wonder if they have not only forgotten (or ever knew) good economics, but also the lessons of history. Maximilien Robespierre, a great orator, most certainly did not intend for himself to be guillotined as he and his colleagues unleashed the Reign of Terror during the French Revolution.

4261. A Letter from Bruce Williams

Received the following letter from Bruce Williams. If you miss his radio show email him and let him know. Sounds like he is bored and misses having a gig so it won't take much to coax him back. He'd be a welcome breath of fresh air compared to the gas bags screamers that now dominate the medium.

Well hello there, welcome, welcome to my world. Bruce Williams here. I'm really looking forward to having a one-way conversation with you and perhaps having it turn into a two-way very quickly.

I am often asked, "do I miss doing the show?" and the answer is yes and no. I don't miss having to be at a specific place every evening at 7 for three hours. Now I can book a flight not having to plan to be somewhere near a microphone at 7 each evening and yet there are things happening in our world that frustrate me. Things that are absurd. Government actions, ridiculous things that happen on the local and national scene. I sure miss having someone to share these things with. For example, the TSA determined that a 95 year old "terrorist suspect" had to have her diaper removed before she could clear security. Maybe a threat, but I'm willing to chance it. Casey Anthony? Enough said! Many of you guys have suggested that I do some type of an IPOD show and I'm giving it some serious consideration. In the meantime if it's ok with you, I'll send a letter of this kind once a month more or less and you tell me if you enjoy it and should continue.

There is so much to discuss. Common day-to-day issues, the examples are many. The relatively high cost to be sandwiched into an airplane built for 150 passengers but meeting the challenge of the owners to cram in 175. Security? An ongoing issue. A couple of days ago I got behind a couple with one little rug rat. They had four, count em FOUR, carryon's; a stroller, car seat and assorted paraphernalia including mom's milk in a bottle (no liquid allowed) it finally passed. It took that couple 10 minutes to clear security and of course I was right behind them running late.

I find a frustrating policy of most publications that accept letters from the public. They insist on having their writers give their name and address. There are lots of occasions when folks would like to express an opinion but for a variety of valid reasons are not going to sign their name. For example, someone wants to defend hiring illegal aliens because they do. Perhaps another feels that if they obey certain government taxes or rules, they'll be out of business. Will they sign their name? Never. Others are afraid to express a politically incorrect perspective. I invite people to send us a brief expression of those thoughts. Please no liable or profanity.

In short, my letters will be eclectic, not pre-programmed to a specific format and hopefully of interest to you. When I say something, express an idea that's controversial or publish something, not everyone will agree, its expected. When that happens, I will always publish at least one or two thoughts expressed by those in disagreement. You may not agree with me but I hope you will find me fair. There is so much going on in our screwball world, I have no fear of lack of things that you and I might discuss. Another area we could get into that my observation that many talk presentations have a lack of civility as well as a lack of substance. I will try to address this in a positive way and your comments are always welcome

You may rightly observe that this type of commentary is available from a variety of sources. Search the Internet, airwaves and columns you will find these approaches in one form or another. This is just another way of saying there is very little new on this earth. This having been said, I believe I can present these with a little different twist. There is so much happening in the world that there no question of the material but a question of editing to find out which is most interesting. Some of the very little things in our lives I find extremely interesting. I noticed in the news a short time ago something on the order of 16 governors, attorneys general and other highly placed officials in many states that border on the Great Lakes, petitioned to have some controls placed on an invasive foreign species of fish. The closing of locks and canals to prevent the fish from coming into the lakes is an example. You've all seen the pictures of one monster that eats everything in sight and then if it hears an outboard motor, it literally jumps into the boat and sometimes damages the passengers. Obviously, fish of this kind creates all sorts of havoc in both the commercial and sports interests in the lakes. Understandably, these officials want to try and keep these fish out of the Great Lakes. It's very hard to argue with that but there may be legitimate objections. In the meantime these foreign species are doing a great deal of damage. The officials were told by our government that the Army Corps of Engineers was making a study of the problem. So far so good. The thing that blew my mind was when the officials asked when the study would be completed it would be at least four years away. Perhaps someone could explain to me why it would take four years to study anything. These are the kinds of things that attract my attention and I believe are worthy of conversation. Another example of why I would like to be back in action in some fashion or another.

If we do an IPOD show I've worked out a lot of things we can offer. We could take callers at various times of the week and day for rebroadcasts that will be available 24/7. I've even considered doing something that I haven't done for over 30 years and that is invite guests. One thing you can take right to the bank, I'll not be getting into show business personalities and pop music. These things have been worked to death. One of the things that I will not do is answer letters similar to the ones I receive for my Smart Money column. If you wish to write me here I will be sure that all of those letters are turned over to the producer of my column and will be considered for publication there. If we elect to do the IPOD show I will follow a format in terms of questions and answers that will be very close to the one we began 30 years ago. Speaking of that November 2nd will be the anniversary date 30 years ago in 1981 when we did our first Talknet show from NBC.

You know that I love to go on cruises. Thousands of you have gone on cruises with us and perhaps we could put together a cruise that we all could enjoy. I'd like to hear your thoughts, no promises, just looking for information. Places, time of the year, how much time on the boat (a week, 10 days or even more?), what kind of a budget are you looking at? How about going with limited groups? 20 or 30 or what size would you suggest? Just a group of people where we can get together and exchange ideas and have a lot of time socializing. Guest speakers? Group activities? I would like to know what you enjoy.

Many years ago I did a great deal of after dinner speaking and a lot of stage shows. You may know of an organization seeking someone to do the after dinner gig. I'd like to hear from you. No obligation. I'm simply looking for ideas of things that I would enjoy doing where we can offer you something that isn't on every cable show, etc.

Another issue that must be addressed. If we do this on a regular basis, after a few months, the activity must be able to generate enough income to get production done without having to be subsidized. It may appear to some that I am out of work and desperately need income. Mercifully, that is not the case. No Food Stamps in my future yet. I have sold some of my business interests and more sales are closing in the very near future. I no longer serve on the Board of Directors of the bank. I don't play golf, don't like to ride around in boats, I'm not a sportsman and I'm not especially interested in professional sports. That said, I must be in action of some kind and I genuinely missed the interchange between you guys. Working has always been my hobby. I don't know how to not be productive. Another purpose is to maintain a marriage. If I hang around the house and drive my wife crazy, I'm afraid I'd lose my wife and the dogs. Maybe you have ideas that we could implement to generate a modest amount of income. I would be very interested in hearing from you. It may well be that you say, "hey dummy, you had your day, let it rest". If you feel that way, tell me. I'd be very happy to call you and talk to you on the phone if you provide a number. If you'd like your name off our mailing list, just ask. If you have friends, neighbors, etc., that would like to be included on our mailing list, simply send us an email to that affect with their email address and we'll get the deed done.

Here is a little exercise to see if you pick up on little things in the news as do I. Some years ago when the Taliban was running Kabul, and they passed Draconian laws concerning women walking with shoes that clicked. The Taliban's notion was that the clicking of the women's heels on the floor or sidewalk would be sexually stimulating to men who hear it and therefore they were banned. Crazy? That's my opinion. How about this? Recently in a large American city, laws were passed that are currently in effect that many common sounds, nothing sexual, nothing off color, just everyday sounds that you can hear anywhere in America millions of times a day, have been outlawed. Hint: A commercial activity that may not be performed in that city where anyone from the public can hear these "stimulating" sounds. Where do you suppose that is and what were the sounds? If you can figure that one out, I'd sure like to hear what you'd have to say. Did you miss this major news development? Are you interested? Do you care?

Alright my friends, that's my opening blast. Next move is yours. Our email address is askbruce@brucewilliams.com. That's simple enough. I would be grateful if you would drop me an email and let me know what you think of any or all of the ideas enclosed and any contributions you would like to make. The next move is yours.

I do wish you well my friends.

The idea, that Islam, Judaism and Christianity are rooted in the same religion and are sort of forms of the same believe, is not stupid at all.

They come from the same region and have the same holy city (Jerusalem) and mention the same characters.

But there are more similarities: e.g. Jews and Muslims have circumcision (what is a rare fact otherwise), do not eat pig and practise (or practised) stoning (what is an extremely cruel and brutal punishment).

Christianity and Judaism share in total the bibles first part.

Christianity is 'modified Judaism' (through prophet) as Islam is. Since 'modification' is a heretic crime, worth death penalty, these religions hate each other since ancient times (for no apparent reason).

4268. WBCQ moving from 7415 to 7490

Glenn, WBCQ has notified me that the FCC has given them until Monday, October 24, 2011, to vacate their 7.415 MHz frequency. The new frequency will be 7.490 MHz. I expect Al will address this in further detail on his show this evening at 0000 UTC on 7.415. Regards, ((Larry Will, Area 51, 2036 UT Oct 22, DX LISTENING DIGEST)

Yes, he did. Summary: FCC says it is because the Civil Air Patrol has a new HF fixed communications system on 7416. 7415 was WBCQ`s #1 frequency since it went on the air Sept 8, 1998. A good run, but have always known that operating on an out-of-band frequency is always subject to getting bumped to another frequency if the US government requires.

Hopes 7490 will be better anyway, away from China Radio International interference on 7415. So happens that the antenna peaks closer to 7.5 MHz. Will retune over the weekend, maybe not on full power at first from Oct 24.

So happens that TimTron Worldwide celebrates tenth anniversary so may give him as much time as he wants this Saturday on 7415 for the last time. Normal time is 7-9 pm EDT.

gh comments: this is good because of the CRI QRM, which was never enough to get Allan to move of his own free will. B-11 schedules show WWCR on 7490 in the mornings, when WBCQ has never been on the air anyway (but 7415 had been available 24 hours for WBCQ, whatever the collisions). We shall be VERY interested to hear if anyone actually picks up CAP on 7416.

The Kazakhstan site is listed on 7490 at 18-22 toward Europe 300 or 200 kW, 301 degrees, the first half for YFR, unknown what for the second half. That`s not too far from Kashgar where the CRI QRM was comingn from. And BBC via Thailand at 22-24, 250 kW, 25 degrees. That`s also toward us, and I`m afraid in the winter that will be a QRM problem along the grayline.

This of course affects WORLD OF RADIO, Thursdays at 2130 UT, and from November at 2230, effective immediately to be on 7490 ex-7415 (Glenn Hauser, DX LISTENING DIGEST)

Technically, NATO got Gaddafi. But I understand what you are trying to say -- sort of like W Bush horning in and trying to claim credit for Osama well after W was out of office. At least Obama is -in- office.

And while we are on the subject, I thought it was quite humorous that the Republicans were whining that it took Obama eight MONTHS to get Gaddafi. How odd that I don't remember the Repubs whining that Bush never got Osama in eight YEARS and that it took Bush six YEARS to get Saddam. Gee, maybe that eight months for Gaddafi wasn't so bad after all, hmmm?

Nice try Doggie, but no cigar.

and Who are the "Men" behind the curtain?
Some call them the Neo-Cons, others , Illuminati. the truth is "The World" is run by the invisible men. They hide and obscure their identities . It is important to them you don't know who they are. They run the banks, the wars and probably world dominance is their game. Your "Mission Impossible" is to find out who they are.

Hint; they want you protesting in the streets, that wastes your energies . It's going to take all your efforts to unmask these "men".
Pale white men. Like Dick Cheney. w/o a heart beat.
Have some Compassion for these ones. They know not what they do.
Don't be distracted by the media.

What the hell is a "cote"?

However, I -did- look up "dipshit" in my dictionary and they had your picture. And, yes, there are numerous newsreels showing the Repubs saying Bush should have gotten some of the credit for Osama.

I did not say Obama got Gaddafi. If you carefully re-read what I said

Gaddafi."

And once again, let me refer you to the newsreels of the Repubs whining that 8 MONTHS was too long for Obama to catch Gaddafi -- and before you embarrass yourself again, please re-read the above where I was quoting the R-E-P-U-B-L-I-C-A-N-S in the newsreels, dumbass.

Liberty Net: October 15, 2011

http://3950.net/2011/10/liberty-net-october-15-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THERE ARE MANY NEW stations checking into the Liberty Net these days, so the word is definitely getting out. Temporarily, though, one of the netï¿½s biggest signals and most knowledgeable participants, Al, N2SAG, is off the air. We all wish him well as he transitions to a new station setup, and look forward to his speedy return to the net.

Here are some of the concepts discussed and debated this week on amateur radioï¿½s longest-running discussion (as opposed to traffic, or mere rag-chewing) net, on the air since 1974:

ï¿½ The Washington regime is now sending combat troops into the Hell that is Uganda ï¿½ supposedly to kill the warlords behind the so-called ï¿½Lordï¿½s Resistance Army.ï¿½ Knowing the history and demographics of the region, the opposition is likely little better, if at all. (19 minutes)

ï¿½ Some wag has calculated that if the banks and the governments of the world were all honest enough to back their currencies with gold ï¿½ which they arenï¿½t ï¿½ the price would have to be $25,000 an ounce. (43 minutes)

ï¿½ As long as corrupt people own the banks and control governments, the value of all fiat money will obey the law of economic entropy and continue to spiral down, down, down. Corrupt thieves cannot profit by raising the value of your dollars, marks, and euros ï¿½ so they constantly diminish it. (49 minutes)

ï¿½ Obama has declared that if his ï¿½jobsï¿½ bill doesnï¿½t pass, heï¿½ll just declare its main provisions to be in effect anyway, and will simply rule by decree. (54 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is the regime in Washington guaranteeing $1.2 billion to a company that uses the money mainly to employ Mexicans? (59 minutes)

ï¿½ Congress has abased itself yet again, officially apologizing for the eminently rational and moral Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882, which ensured the survival of European-Americans and our civilization on this continent. (1 hour 2 minutes)

ï¿½ Under a California bill popularly called the ï¿½Dream Act II,ï¿½ illegal aliens ï¿½ but not citizens ï¿½ will be able to attend college absolutely free: in other words, we pay their tuition. (1 hour 5 minutes)

ï¿½ If you enter Obamaï¿½s Social Security Number into the regimeï¿½s own ï¿½E-Verifyï¿½ system, it indicates that he is an illegal immigrant with fraudulent documentation. (1 hour 7 minutes)

The Liberty Net is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or around 3950 kHz SSB (lately itï¿½s been higher in frequency ï¿½ as high as 3993, often around 3980 ï¿½ to avoid interference).

Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. Currently the primary live chat is on the N2IRJ feed, while N2SAG gets his station set up again. And, as always, you can download the net right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

4282. The Worst Audio on Shortwave...

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave

...and the best:

I'd be interested to know if anyone can top the unbelievably bad quality on this broadcast last night from WWCR:

http://liberty.3950.net/WWCR_4840kHz_20111022-0230amET.mp3

It sounds like the African Holy Roller service source material had nearly supernaturally grotesque distortion to begin with, but when you add to that WWCR's earbleed-inducing audio processing, the resulting audio is so bad that it really needs a new term to describe it. "Low-fi" is too kind. Maybe "negative-fi."

Just by way of contrast, here's a recording that shows how good shortwave audio can be -- same receiver, same recording setup, as the foregoing file:

http://liberty.3950.net/WA3VJB%207290%2020k%20bw%2020110320%200317PM%20ET.mp3

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

I swear, during some of those screamingly "spirit filled" services that I've heard aired on certain "urban" stations, it sounds like both the preacher and his congregation actually rise into the air by the end of the broadcast.

Nice catch, especially during the daytime. Was that 1345 zulu (0945 EDT)? I'm assuming it was ground wave and not some bizarre post-sunrise burp of the ionosphere. IIRC, Michigan recently had a soaking rain, so maybe ground conductivity is extra good. I've heard them here in Ohio at sunset.

Yes, 1345z. Not sure if groundwave, as it faded by 1410.

Sunrise here was about 1208 and in Minneapolis about 1239.

With the music that was being played, and the announcer, at first I thought it was a pirate.

Soaking rain, huh. Right now we have a t-storm and lightning moving through.

I mean, if they let other crooks start running around with masks on, it will cut their profits, severely!

On my very first job in broadcasting (as a board operator), a preacher came to the studio on Sunday morning. It was quite a sight for my naive young eyes. Spittle flowing freely, sweat flowing freely, a bright red face. I truly thought the man was having a stroke or an apoplectic fit.

Later, as Chief Engineer of another local FM outlet, we had many storefront churches that we sold time to. Most were unattended by anyone from the station; they just had a Bogen line amp we told them to turn on a half hour before air time. Talk about distortion and bad audio!!!!

A few of the wealthier churches paid to have a radio station operator attend the service with a 3-channel Gates mixer and Shure mics. I can't say I ever saw anyone "actually rise into the air by the end of the broadcast", but it was wilder than any rock and roll concert. I always said (semi) facetiously that they had a 40 piece orchestra: one organ and 39 tambourines. :-D

What was truly amazing, is EVERYTHING which was needed to construct the original MAC was already laying about on the shelves, just waiting to be picked up and assembled into a working unit.

Jobs and Wozniak were able to see that and assemble it ... however, the really important question is, why were all these parts just lying about? Why had the components been created without the realization of what their real purpose(s) was/were/are?

For most people, it went over their heads, and still does, for that matter ... still, jobs and wozniak were pretty smart guys to solve a mystery which had escaped the rest of the world ...

OK, the fadeout probably means skywave. Rare conditions can give midday MW skywave DX. In fact, I had a vague memory of a great high-noon MW skywave opening to the northwest. I dusted off my old logs and sure enough, on January 25 1994 I heard these stations right around noon:

1112 EST - KDAL 610 - Duluth, MN - 5 kw
1139 EST - WKKQ 650 - Nashwauk, MN - 10 kw
1200 EST - CJOB 680 - Winnipeg, MB - 50 kw
1216 EST - WDSM 710 - Superior, WI - 10 kw
1248 EST - WMEQ 880 - Menomonie, WI - 10 kw

Winnipeg (CJOB) is about 1,000 miles away from me. Hearing 1,000 miles to the northwest via skywave at high noon on medium wave blew my mind! This kind of stuff is why I love to DX medium wave.

They were heard on a Drake R8 and Kiwa loop.

Absolutely incorrect . The only violence that has to do with the 'occupiers' comes from cops .

OK, the fadeout probably means skywave. Rare conditions can give mid-day MW skywave DX. In fact, I had a vague memory of a great high-noon MW skywave opening to the northwest. I dusted off my old logs and sure enough, on January 25 1994 I heard these stations right around noon:

1112 EST - KDAL 610 - Duluth, MN - 5 kw
1139 EST - WKKQ 650 - Nashwauk, MN - 10 kw
1200 EST - CJOB 680 - Winnipeg, MB - 50 kw
1216 EST - WDSM 710 - Superior, WI - 10 kw
1248 EST - WMEQ 880 - Menomonie, WI - 10 kw

Winnipeg (CJOB) is about 1,000 miles away from me. Hearing 1,000 miles to the northwest via skywave at high noon on medium wave blew my mind! This kind of stuff is why I love to DX medium wave.

They were heard on a Drake R8 and Kiwa loop.

My most interesting DX was ~ 400 mile ground wave. I was living in Astoria, OR, and was able to listen to (then) KFXD 580 in Boise on my car radio all day long, all winter long.

Interestingly, this works both ways: On a visit to Lewiston, ID, I could hear several Portland stations, this on a GE Superadio II, during the day in the winter. These were (then) KGW 620, KWJJ 1080 and KEX 1190. On a day with a heavy snowfall over the entire northwest, KGW sounded just like a local station... and it wasn't even in their pattern!

There's a part of town in SW Portland (Raleigh Hills) where, on my little 6 transistor pocket radio, any day, any time of year (daytime only!) I could listen to 610 out of Kennewick, WA just by nulling KGW by turning the radio in just the right direction.

Yep... BCBDX really is fun.

I dunno... he could be right. Maybe shootings ARE up since OWS started up.. but not BECAUSE of them. I'm thinking that it's because NYPD is wasting so many cops on a peaceful protest that they can't keep the peace in the rest of the city.

DOH ! again

Jesus was NO "prophet"
He was, according to the Christians, the Messiah predicted in the Old Testament and also the Son of God
Muhammad, on the other hand was no prophet at all, he was a minor war lord who wanted to extend his power by upgrading himself to a religious prophet When the Christians rejected him, he started his own cult, a big part of which is to kill just about anyone both inside and outside of his cult.
The COMPLETE ANTITHESIS of Christianity..

Your ignorance is so abyssal that it is even deeper than the Marianas Trench.

They most certainly do, or more accurately have ... now the hardware simply needs to have those translated ... new hardware can be constructed which can do a whole LOT of things that WHQL drivers, are not aware of and can't use ... not until the windows drivers and constructed, by microsoft, will those ever be used ...

WHQL is the specification, is the test, is the standard for windows drivers ... it is the sole creation and property of microsoft.

Like I say, you attempt to use semantics to prove black is really white ...

No, John. Black is black and white is white.

Microsoft writes the specs to which the driver's must be written...

...but the hardware manufacturers/vendors write them.

Right, WHQL and the windows driver SDK is only a figment of software engineers imaginations ... ROFLOL

But, the windows driver sdk could be rewritten and non-windows certified drivers created (indeed, I have used work-a-like driver SDKs, however, they cannot be used in the creation of windows WHQL drivers) ... duh!
Linux is really only a rewrite of unix and was done to have a free OS ...

You are a fool who wants to split hairs and change the discussion off to a tangent ... fool.

Really?

I've got a lot of drivers on my computer, and when I look at the data I find most are provided by Microsoft.

In fact, the only drivers which aren't from Microsoft are those I installed or downloaded from a manufacturer.

Disk Drivers - Drivers by Microsoft Disk Interface - Drivers by Microsoft
Keyboard - Driver by Microsoft Mouse - Driver by Microsoft
Monitor - Driver by Microsoft Ports - Driver by Microsoft
CPU - Driver by Microsoft System Devices - Drivers by Microsoft
USB - Driver by Microsoft

Video Card - Driver by Nividia
Ethernet - Driver by Intel
Audio - Drivers by RealTec

If the hardware manufacturers/venders write them, then why do they state they were provided by Microsoft?

Seems to me if someone else provided the drivers, then they could sue Microsoft for false representation.

So why haven't they?

Do you now what an SDK is? Seriously? A "software development kit"; a set of tools to make developing software easier. And it's called the "WDK", John: the "Windows Driver Kit"

Hardware manufacturers download the WDK...

...so that they can develop (write) drivers.

Period.

You do realize that there is an OS called "FreeBSD", right?

It's not a hair.

Microsoft doesn't write the drivers: the hardware manufacturers do.

Scout: my discussions with John arose specifically about video cards.

"Windows didn't "go ahead" and do that, John. The companies that build the graphics cards provide the drivers."

Quickly: Tell us again who wrote the video card drivers on your system...

So? My default drivers is provided by <gasp> Microsoft.

Indeed if Microsoft didn't provide a driver for video cards it would be extremely hard to install the O/S on the computer.

Yep, but Microsoft also produces drivers for graphics cards.

> Quickly: Tell us again who wrote the video card drivers on your system...

Initially it was Microsoft.

Later it was Nividia

However, without that graphics card driver from Microsoft I would never have been able to instead the driver from Nividia.

For devices with extremely well-defined interfaces. You can have disk drivers by Microsoft because the drive manufactures work to the ATA spec, etc.

And because for basic drivers, the manufacturers make sure the cards follow a basic spec.

Very basic ones, yes.

Nope. Not true. It would have been a good bit more difficult... ...but not impossible.

But the point of this was that John was touting Microsoft for writing the drivers that make the high-performance video cards work in their high-performance mode...

...and it just isn't so.

ROFLOL!!!!! Can't say semantics huh?

Fords engineers write the specs and create the templates but because contractors manufacture the parts or assemble sub-assemblies, they build it ... ROFLOL

What a fool ... microsoft writes the drivers, like I said ...

Actually, you fudge again, whether by ignorance or design.

As I said, gates envisioned a motherboard with a chip on it, for video, and would handle everything ... and, as I further stated, that did NOT work out well ... windows had to rewrite and adapt the windows video drivers to accompany much more powerful video ... and, of course, we are now at the point where video cards, in themselves, are as powerful as yesterdays computers ...

Windows write the specs, which defines the drivers, although they may be assembled by software engineers working for others and off site ... not any different than hardware, really ... in the aspects of the model of patents, design, implementation, construction, manufacture, etc.

If someone wants to interface their hardware with windows, windows is the piper and calls the tune ... "they" simply dance to it.

Astoria looks like a great location for hearing MW DX from places across the Pacific like Hawaii, Asia, Australia, etc. Did you ever try that?

You have to have a really directional antenna system to null out the strong regional stations plus the 50KW night time blowtorches. My friend Pat has DX'ed much of S. America and Asia from his place in Warrenton (just across the bay). For me, the band was pretty much loaded with Canadian, Mexican and western US blowtorches. Reports from DX'ers in HI noted reception of KAST (1370) during daytime hours (their pattern is pretty much aimed at that part of the Pacific.)

Yep, just like graphics cards at least to a certain resolution.

Be that as it may, the default driver is still done by Microsoft.

Well, actually, the BIOS and internal sockets in Windows has support for the higher modes then your driver simply wouldn't work.

In short, you're not going to exceed the limits of what the BIOS and/or O/S sets for the maximum limit.

Within the limits of the BIOS and O/S you can write drivers that will work, but only within the limits of what is supported by them.

He is wrong, so now he attempts to narrow the driver down to just what is created in the card vendors shops ... it is the only avenue of argument left him ... his argument may well fool the fools ...

I don't you have the slightest idea what you mean by any of that.

Scout:

The reason ATI cannot use NVIDIA drives is that the hardware is different, windows make the same calls from its' driver (basically, some minor differences are involved), there are windows drivers at work. If the card is NVIDIA, those software engineers will translate the driver calls into the proper hardware instructions ... if the card is ATI, the same is done, only the hardware calls are different.

Windows has much different drivers than MAC, even when operating on the same chip, the reason for all of this is complex and involves patents, and differences between the two operating systems and many other factors.

The beginning discussion was on windows drivers, such as versus MAC drivers ... however, in all fairness, in the industry, there are actually two levels of utilities termed "drivers", and splits into "high level drivers" and "low lever drivers." Or, simply, in shop the card manufacturers will call their software (or firmware) "drivers." And they are low level drivers, in fact ...

But, and I know it got confusing with everything being tossed into the bowl to aid in obfuscation ... we WERE speaking of windows drivers ... windows simply has no interest in the actually calls, commands, and port addresses of the hardware ... but, make no mistake, the windows drives are the "data pumps" and "data suckers" ... indeed, to windows, believe it or not, a video card is much like just another file to be written to, or read from ... same for unix and linux also, indeed, this model is much more apparent in those latter systems ...

You said, and I quote "Microsoft writes the specs to which the driver's must be written... ...but the hardware manufacturers/vendors write them."

Clearly it was a matter of debate, and I am debating whether that was really the case.

Try getting any 32 bit version of windows to see 8gb of memory. Write any driver you like. But guess what. 4gb is all any 32 bit Windows will EVER see, and even less that will be useable.

Try plugging a 500gb drive into a motherboard that supports only a 28-bit LBA. Tell me the maximum hard drive size Windows will ever see no matter what driver you write for it.

Sorry, but there are limits and your drivers can only work within the limits set.

What do either of those have to do with video drivers?

Be specific.

Simple. Windows can only address so much memory, whether it is system memory, or memory on a video card makes no difference.

Resolution and color depth is limited by memory.

Thus Windows has a limit (very high) on the maximum resolution it can support.

In conclusion, beyond that limit no video driver in the world is going to work to support a graphics card beyond the limit set by the memory addressing established by the O/S

Luckily the limit is so high that before it is reached the technology is usually safely obsolete.

For example. Plug a 1gb video card into 32 bit windows and you're going to have only about 2.5gb of maximum useable memory left for programs.
Plug a 2gb card in and you would have only about 1.5gb left.
Plug in a 4gb card and it wouldn't even be supported by 32 bit windows.

Thus the resolution is limited by the amount of physical memory that the O/S can address.

Period. End of line.

And who wrote the specs which those drivers need to meet to be compatible with windows
And by the way, in many cases, 3rd party software houses write those drivers to the specs provided by Windows and the parts manufacturer.
It's called "outsourcing" and "sub-contracting"
Quite a comme practice, doncha'know...

No, I mean they are the same people. The religions are different of course. But since they are the same people, these religious originate from the same roots.

A more recent example would be Catholics and Protestants. Both have the same roots in Christianity, but they fought bitter and long lasting wars. Germany was almost completely destroyed and depopulated through this, even if they were all Christians.

Some thousand years ago, there was a religion in the area, were is now Jerusalem. This religion was ancestor to all following religions from the same roots. From this believe these religions have developed into their current different forms. The roots have to be the same, since the religions are in parts identical: use the same metaphors, stories, characters and even locations.

Circumcision is only one example or cultural identity of the people addressed. It is - of course - not a 'healthy habit', but a (pseudo-) religious practise.

It's a bad thing - btw - because it changes the appearance of the human body, that is intended to be as perfect as it is and not as humans want it to be.

Islam says Jesus was a prophet. Jews do not mention him (since Judaism was created earlier). Islam was created later, hence could mention him.
But the bible is ABOUT Jesus, not written by him. A prophet is someone, who manages to write things down and tell that to the people. Apparently Mohamed was a prophet (but I have only limited knowledge about Islam)

I have no idea, from what sources prophets are chosen, but 'little warlord' would not exclude him from such a position.

Actually the Christians killed a few people, too. They really love to kill: Muslims, Indians, Africans, each other ...

Actually circumcision IS a healthy habit.
In an area where water is in short supply, it's far easier to avoid infection of the penile glans by removing the foreskin.
It's also noted that removing the foreskin also reduces the incidence of transmitted diseases as well

Nice article! I can still remember our old console. My Grandpa got an RCA TV in 1951, and moved the console to the garage. He would still go out to the garage and listen to it while doing work.

It's interesting you should say that. I got more work done in my first 20 minutes using a Mac than I did the previous two hours under Windows.

Since my business went to Apple computers, and PC's running Linux, the workday went from a solid 8 to 10 hours every day, to between 4 and 6 hours 4 days a week. With nearly 20% increase in output.

I run no Microsoft software, anywhere, today. And have never gotten more done in less time. And had a more pleasant time doing it.

Although radios had been around during my whole life, I only took a real interest in them once the transistor appeared on the scene and I could sneak them into bed with earphones and listen into the wee hours of the night. But, even before then, the SW was on a table by the bed and it too accompanied me into the wee hours.

Back then, radio was much more interesting, more critique was being aired, radio moscow and havana cuba during the missile crisis, etc.

Today, with the political correct nature of things, and the domination by NWO types who have no allegiance or loyalty to any single nation makes SW "vanilla flavored."

Luke warm radio and a silencing of the radial voice of opposition to drug wars, illegal aliens, government coverups, false flag operations, criminal public servants, etc. has just taken all the fun out of radio ... it feels like 1984 and the development of the soylent green is taking place, but everyone has been put to sleep and the patriots are all silent ...

1964, the spirt of 1776 and JFK, where are you?

Chainsaws, now there is an interesting subject. It was certainly the weapon of choice in the Texas Chainsaw Massacres.

Reminds me of a fantasy dream where bushes, clintons and obama, along with insane mccain, pain in the arse palin, perry the fairy, the criminal pizza king, and various other public servants and political figures are being brutally slaughtered by American patriots with chainsaws -- patriotic terrorists on a rampage! I just love the visuals there ...

The forefathers were patriotic terrorists, some will deny that, or be afraid to mention it, but patriot terrorism is certainly without fault, and, desirable when you have organized crime in government and the superhero patriotic terrorists show up ...

It appears that a great many requests were for removal of defamatory material against individuals due to a court order
I don't consider such removal to be interference with free speech.

> I don't consider such removal to be interference with free speech.
> Do you ?

The cause listed as 'defamatory' but the content was not revealed. The Court has long and often stated that individuals who may be public figures are not afforded some protections from so-called defamation, even in such case as the allegations against such individual are untrue. Malice of Intent must be proven. Very difficult in the case of a public figure.

Further, the specific video involving 'government criticism' was petitioned by the government.

It is the nature of Free Speech, that a case for defamation must be made to a legal standard, and transparency is required.

It is also the nature of Free Speech that the government may not silence content that is critical of itself. This is guaranteed by the First Amendment.

And, it is the nature of Free Speech that protections are afforded to speech that is neither popular, or comforting. Speech which is popular and comforting requires no protection.

Be VERY careful about endorsing, sanctioning, or being complicit with any government that seeks to silence criticism. Of any kind, but most specifically of itself. It is the very essense of Freedom that the citizen has the right, if not the duty, to speak back to Power.

Even if that citizen is wrong.

When speech is silenced, transparency is obscured.

"Google" and "transparency" are mutually exclusive terms.

I'm not sure about its non-Apple support being better. For instance, I have to tell Word every time that I want my Kodak printer to print duplex. Linux has to support all hardware and software.

Howard: pretty much any piece of Linux software can be recompiled for Mac OS X. So if it works on Linux, you can make it work in precisely the same way the Linux guys do: compile it and install it.

Wouldn't be so bad, if they were shooting criminal public servants and the criminals in authority, street punks, perverts, crooks, etc.

The problem is, when guns are illegal, such as NY, only the crooks have the guns, we need more decent citizens with guns to return fire ...

MACS are weak, and you will have to abandon any hope of running most

Better yet, just dump the crap OS X OS and load up linux ... your choice of apps and games will be MUCH LARGER! Only problem then with be the actual MAC hardware, which you will have to deal with and upgrade, if possible.

Nope. Because with Mac OS X you can run Linux apps and games, but Linux can't run Mac OS X software.

I Linux beats Windows in your estimation, then automatically, Mac OS X beats both, because it can do everything that Linux can do and then more.

Actually, quite untrue, even when running windows 7 32 bit, a 1 gb video card (and its' taking up one gig for shadowing of ram) leaves ~15 gig quite free for apps, etc. And, I find the same for linux ...

I have never run 32 bit on my 32 gig system, but windows 7 64bit has no problem in using all the ram ... however, the 32 gigs of ram is most often an overkill ... but I got a good buy on the memory ...

Ah, memories. As a kid, I listened to a 6-transistor pocket-sized AM radio in bed to see what out of town stations I could hear.

The spirit of 1776 is basically dead, mainly because almost half of the population are invaders from non-European countries. Pat Buchanan has been predicting the USA's (and White Western civilization's) death for years. He wrote some spot-on books about it:

Coast to Coast still airs "conspiracy theories", political commentary including some pretty harsh (and right on imo) criticisms, UFO stuff, different kinds of science, NASA news, people who had NDE's, psychics, people who make predictions who have a good track record, remove viewers with a good track record, sometimes some pretty interesting stuff. The old host Art Bell was really good, and all of the guest hosts I've heard are good, but I don't really like George Noory the main host. If you can stomach him you'll probably find shows you reall ylike. It's aired on stations all over the country, it's on 10pm-2am PST, you can look for a station near you on their web site http://www.coasttocoastam.com/stations

Ah, then you want to pay 10 to 20 times more for the food you eat.
Also, the rich would never stand for having to pay a living wage to the people who clean their pools and rake their yards.

Mike's Excursion into the Extreme

by Jay Lieberman

"Are you sure about this?"

The man's curt interrogative cut through Mike's lust-induced euphoria. Sitting here naked, in front of these three middle-aged men, his small cock hard with anticipation, Mike was at a loss for words. Here he was, it seemed, after all the time cruising chat rooms and personals ads, which he had just about given up on producing anything but geeky try-hards who just wanted to masturbate over his frank replies, then ran a mile when he suggested a meeting. Then he'd seen the ad posted by the three stern-faced, hard-bodied men standing over him, where he sat on the cold stone basement floor. Their ad had been short, sharp and to the point-

"Wanted- a boy who is prepared to give all to his Masters. Nothing ventured, nothing gained. Time wasters will be ignored. If you think you have what it takes, get in touch."

A day later, he had replied, then spent two weeks awaiting their reply. After the first week he had written them off as just another group of (or more likely an individual) the same pretenders he'd been almost driven to giving up by. Why was it so damned hard to find men, real men, who knew what they wanted from a willing sub and weren't afraid to go for it? Then- you've got mail, and he was astonished to find a detailed reply, almost three pages, including a photo of the bottom halves of three hairy, stocky well-endowed men, their erect cocks twice as long as his own small penis. Excited, he devoured their reply immediately, reading their terms, their needs, their conditions and what he would have to do to convince them he was genuine.

Mike's face had paled at some of the activities they suggested; he had always considered himself a pretty open-minded sub, he'd had his share of bondage, fisting, enemas and role-play. But these guys were the real McCoy. Totally extreme, the sort of people he had heretofore only dreamed about meeting. Fighting down a rising sense of apprehension, and fear at these three men thinking he was a lying pretender, he made the vow in his reply that he demanded, and included his phone number and a rather poor quality scan of his face, taken from an old ID photo.

Another two weeks passed, and Mike spent most of the time fretting and imagining what sort of reaction he would receive. Then another email, this one only two lines. It was an address, and a phone number. They wouldn't ring him; it was his duty to do the work. It also included a date and a time- the date was today's date, the time 3 hours from when Mike finished work. He couldn't concentrate on his work, so he took the afternoon off, and went home, showering and douching while he tried to screw up the courage to ring.

At around seven o'clock, he grabbed his touchdial phone and hurriedly jammed in the number, which was from across town. He made two mistakes, and on the third attempt finally got a ringing phone, which was promptly answered by a rather irritated elderly lady. He hung up in her ear, calmed himself down, and slowly dialed the number, pausing between each number. The phone rang... once... twice... three times... four ti-

"Hello?" The voice was thickly accented; German, perhaps, or maybe Dutch.

"Ah... is this... er I mean... do you... I'm the guy you emailed..." Mike cursed himself at his clumsy opening.

"Email? What's that?" The man barked, and Mike almost dropped the phone.

"Er... your email... it said to ring this number... I...."

"Ah, you want Franz. Hold on." The man bellowed out the name, and Mike could hear footsteps approaching on the other end of the line. The phone was dropped, then picked up again.

"Ja? Kann ich ihnen hilfen?" This accent was also Germanic, but softer, almost seductive in its quiet, even tone.

"Ah... your email... phone... I mean, I was trying to phone..."

"You are Mike, ja?"

"Yes. Yes, I'm Mike..."

"Are you canceling?" Franz's tone became cold, disappointed.

"N-No- I, well you put the phone number in the-"

"Well then I expect you at eight. Bring a change of clothes, you will be here for a while."

The phone was slammed back into the receiver, and Mike started. Trembling slightly, he once again cursed himself, and rose to get ready. Pausing to grab a clean shirt and pair of jeans, he threw them into an overnight bag, and headed out.

Arriving shortly after eight (traffic was bad, as always) he looked up at an impressive three storey house, in one of the city's exclusive suburbs. A neatly trimmed lawn framed the structure, a neo-Georgian affair which showed signs of the excellent skill of the artisans who crafted it. The large wooden door had a huge bronze knocker, which Mike chose to ignore, rapping instead on the door with his bare knuckles.

A beefy man in his late fifties answered it, admitting the nervous Mike, who felt as if his stomach was about to implode. Without saying a word, he looked him up and down, and escorted him down a short hall, to a set of stairs, where they both headed down. Downstairs was the basement where Mike now sat, and it was in that room that the other two men, around similar age as the man who had admitted him, awaited his arrival.

Mike gazed around himself, as he had when he arrived. The room contained several chairs, a metal table with straps at each corner, a rack, and rows of rather nasty looking implements. Leather restraints dangled from metal hooks set in the ceiling, while the floor was of bare concrete, cold on his naked behind. They had ordered him to strip upon arrival, and had stashed his clothes in a locker. Now the three of them, wearing white towels about their waists and nothing else, stood observing him calmly.

"Again I ask, are you sure about this?" The question was asked again, by the man Mike assumed was Franz. He was a stocky German, in his late forties, and had been in the dungeon when Mike was led downstairs by who he assumed to be the other man he had spoken to on the phone. The third man was the youngest, and leanest, although he was still quite stocky. He had not spoken a word since Mike arrived.

Mike looked directly up into Franz's cold grey eyes, and nodded once. He was certain; it might not seem it, but he had dreamed of such an encounter his whole life. He had engaged in activities to enhance his submissive role; his body was totally devoid of hair, even his groin, and both of his nipples were pierced. His slender, youthful frame didn't look capable of withstanding much punishment, however, and maybe this was why the man was hesitating.

"Gut." Franz nodded, and without another word dropped his towel. The other two followed suit, revealing penises that were impressive even flaccid. Beckoning Mike to his feet, they led him to the metal table.

Franz issued a series of instructions to his two companions, who he referred to as Hans and Helmut, who complied with grunts. Mike was placed face up on the table, which rose on an angle as he lay down, so he was lying at an angle of 45 degrees. His arms and wrists were bound, while his legs were spread widely, and placed in high stirrups, so he lay as if squatting low on the ground. His naked hairless anus was fully accessible, as the men desired.

Franz glanced down at Mike, toyed briefly with his penis, then strode to the nearest rack. Fetching an item down, he returned, and bid Hans to clasp Mike's testicles. A leather band was slipped round the balls, and fastened tightly by a metal stud. Mike winced, but said nothing, as his balls were constricted painfully near the base. Satisfied, Franz returned to the rack, and fetched a blindfold. Without asking, he wrapped the blindfold around Mike's head. This was followed by a ball gag, which was rammed unceremoniously into his mouth, and tied tightly. Mike struggled a little, and earned a stinging slap on his constricted balls. Moaning, he lay still, scared beyond belief, and yet also aroused beyond belief.

Mike heard a jar being opened, and then a creamy substance was smeared around his naked anus. Two thick fingers slipped in, coating the inside walls of the rectum with the greasy lube. Mike made a muffled noise at the unexpected intrusion, and was ignored. There were no safe words here, no turning back; they wouldn't harm him permanently, but by the terms of his contract he had ceded total authority to them for the session.

The fingers dug a bit deeper, then were withdrawn. Mike heard a satisfied grunt, then felt the fingers smear the substance on his chest. Someone grabbed his nipples and twisted them harshly; Mike arched from the table and made a muffled squeal. The twisting was intensified, and accompanied by several stinging slaps directly on his balls. Mike moaned through the gag, and the nipples were released. The men moved around, whispering to each other in their own language, and Mike awaited the first onslaught.

It came soon; Franz fetched a large rubber dildo from a shelf, roughly eight inches long, and the width of a beer bottle. Rubbing the end of the dildo against Mike's shaved hole, he uttered what almost sounded like a prayer, and began to roughly insert it, not pausing once. Mike thrashed and squealed as the latex intruder powered into his rectum, stretching the anal opening wide as it invaded. Pausing two-third of the way in, Franz yanked it back out, and thrust it in again. He proceeded with this rubber fucking, each time going a little deeper on re-entry, until finally the tip of the dildo came into contact with Mike's second sphincter, forcing it open painfully. Mike was not inexperienced in deep anal probing, and no real harm was done, but it was swift enough to cause even an experienced bottom a fair amount of pain.

Hans tore a strip of gaffer tape from a roll and slapped it over the dildo, keeping it rammed into Mike's stretched hole. Making a guttural noise, Hans moved to Mike's head, which was at waist height, and removed the gag. Mike was totally unaware of who was who, and didn't know whose cock he felt pressed into his face as he gasped for air. The cock was forced into his mouth, and began to swell to its full eight inches. Mike gagged and made a muffled sound, and it was withdrawn slightly, only to be shoved back in again, driving down his experienced throat. After two more thrusts, Hans' hairy balls slapped against Mike's chin as his cheesy dick invaded his throat.

Mike gagged as he vigorously sucked at the dick, the bitter taste of the cheese under Hans' foreskin an unexpected factor. But he was determined to perform, and began to relish this humiliating oral rape, taking the invader deeply, sucking at its impressive girth. Hans began to moan, and grabbed at Mike's nipples, twisting them as he thrust vigorously into his new slave's mouth. After a few more sharp thrusts he began to come, thick stringy ropes of semen spurting down Mike's throat. Mike swallowed the strong, salty cum thirstily, and continued to suck the softening cock.

To his surprise, the cock did not withdraw. Instead, he felt it twitch in his mouth, and then a gush of hot, bitter urine flooded his cum-soaked mouth. Gagging, Mike began to swallow the strong piss, to avoid choking. His face reddened and his breathing became irregular as he struggled to take all of this man's salty urine. Hans took a little pity and withdrew slightly, allowing Mike more time to swallow. But he was going to swallow every drop, as he vowed. Mike gulped and gulped until no more came, then gasped for air as the smelly cock was withdrawn. His head spun as he fell back, exhausted.

But the three men were far from done. Helmut, irritated at being left out thus far, clambered onto the table, placing his large, sweaty, hairy balls at the entrance to Mike's cum and piss soaked throat. Mike felt the pressure, and opened wide to admit them, sucking and nibbling the smelly testicles as his nose was driven into Helmut's unwashed anus, the strong smell of shit and sweat almost overpowering.

Helmut grunted as he masturbated while he sat on Mike's face, his strong man odors almost overpowering the young man. With a gasp he came quickly, aroused by Mike's expert oral work on his balls. Cum spurted in thick creamy gobs from his cock, splattering Mike's chest and groin. Muttering, Hans shifted his position so that his anus was now directly over Mike's mouth, and moaned anew as Mike's experienced tongue snaked out to lick at his hairy hole.

Mike smacked his lips as he licked hungrily at the hole, his tongue probing deep, coming back with a light brown smear as it encountered Helmut's shit. With a little panic, Mike realized suddenly what Helmut had in mind, but before he could think about it a small turd began to slide out, the slimy brown excrement sliding down Mike's tongue and into his mouth. Mike choked the shit down, trembling with nausea, but he managed to overcome the natural urge to puke his guts out, and managed to devour two more small turds, chewing on them and swallowing as the next came.

Satisfied, Helmut leapt off his toilet and grinned down at Mike's shitcovered mouth and nose. Rubbing his hair affectionately, he said something in German, then moved away. Franz had been happy observing up till now, and when Helmet dismounted he moved forward, standing next to Mike's head.

"Do you like our gifts, Michael?" He spoke in soft, seductive tones as he stroked his eleven inch shaft.

"Yes..." Mike was lost in a wave of pleasure mixed with nausea, and could barely think straight.

"I like how you devour our piss and our shit. You will be a good slave, Michael." Franz's voice trailed off, and he moved to the foot of the table.

With a sudden movement, he yanked the tape off the dildo and tore it free from Mike's now-gaping hole, admiring how clean it was, as Mike had recently douched. Placing it aside, he sat down on a stool between Mike's legs, and lightly slapped his balls while he worked a couple of fingers into the wide hole, the lube dripping out like someone's enormous load of cum, recently deposited.

Working the fingers in gently, he slowly added a third, then a fourth, and then finally the top joint of his thumb, twisting and thrusting as Mike gasped and groaned. Franz noticed he wasn't gagged, and nodded to Hans. Hans assumed Helmut's position, and forced his hairy asshole down on Mike's mouth, releasing a large, solid turd as Franz forced the widest part of his large hand into Mike's hole. Mike made muffled sounds around a mouthful of shit, and Franz drilled deeper, his probing fingers soon encountering the second ring of muscle.

Hans began to get hard again as Mike lapped at the shit tainting his hairy hole, and Franz penetrated the second sphincter with a greasy digit. Mike moaned and tried to say something. Franz barked something in German, and Helmut grabbed Mike's balls and squeezed them hard. Mike squealed like a pig, and then quieted. Helmut gave the balls a good twist, then a slap. Hans laughed, a cruel sound, and farted into Mike's face. Mike cried out again, and Franz added two more fingers to his internal invasion.

Franz's face was creased as he concentrated on achieving maximum depth without seriously hurting the young American. He knew by now Mike was no stranger to fisting, and was determined to go the distance with the slave. Mike made more weird sounds as Franz began to work on forcing his hand past this troublesome barrier to serious anal penetration. With a sudden thrust, he was through, past the widest part, and Mike's anus began to suck at his arm, pulling it in despite Mike's pleas for mercy.

Onwards Franz drove, past the hardest obstacle, deeper into the gaping hole that would most likely never be quite the same again. He managed to get his arm in up to just before his elbow, then made a final shove and achieved his goal. Mike was beside himself in a mixture of pain and pleasure, and didn't seem to notice as the piss of Hans and Helmut rained down on his constricted genitals. Cum spurted from his own small cock as the pleasure peaked, but Franz didn't notice or care.

With a sudden motion, he yanked his arm free, a wet sucking sound accompanying the pop it made as it came out, soaked in lube and traces of shit. Nodding, Franz repositioned the hand, and thrust back in, hard. The first punch fuck tore the breath from Mike, and he gagged and choked. Hans leapt off, not wishing to asphyxiate the young man, and Mike made ragged breathing noises as Franz, undeterred, began to roughly punch fuck his new slave, drawing almost all the way out, only to return to elbow depth with full force. Hans and Helmut were both hard again, and were jacking off into Mike's mouth, which was by now a shit pit, stained with feces and cum. Stringy gobs of semen leapt from their large tools into his gasping mouth; he licked at them and swallowed hungrily as Franz jackhammered into his gaping anus.

Mike was sure this was it, for him, but was still in for more. Hans waved a broken capsule under his nose, and suddenly he was euphoric, renewed with energy, and more relaxed than ever. He began to get hard again as Franz punch fucked him, and began to thrust back. Nodding, Franz paused, and a new pressure was added to Mike's anus. In shock, he realized the man fisting him was going to force his second hand in. Begging and sobbing, his pleas fell on deaf ears (in actuality, Mike would have hated himself later if they had taken him seriously) as Franz forced his second hand into the ravaged asshole, stretching it to insane proportions as he drove in with both hands.

Mike screamed now, as they hit the second sphincter, and his head lolled in delirium. Franz powered on, forcing first one hand through, and then part of the second. This was it for Mike, who came again while screaming for mercy. Helmut let fly with another stream of piss, and Hans belted Mike's balls with a birch rod. The second hand couldn't quite force the sphincter without serious repercussions, so Franz left it where it was, driving deeper with the other, then yanking both out, leaving Mike's permanently enlarged asshole gaping, its muscles totally extended. Mike was in tears now, as the fists continued their relentless assault.

Franz removed one hand then, and began to masturbate, pointing his huge cock at Mike's anus, which was too stretched for any fucking. With a grunt, he came, his come pouring into the wide hole, his other hand pushing the creamy goo deep into Mike's bowels.

"And thus I impregnate you, my young slave. Erotic, isn't it?" Franz grunted as he emptied his load into Mike's bowels, his other hand making sure every drop was forced as deep as possible.

Mike couldn't remember what came next; the second round of toilet servitude, the mounds of shit in his hair, in his mouth, or Hans shoving handfuls of his own shit up Mike's gaping, cum-filled hole. He had come several more times, during the next four hours, as the three men repeatedly worked him, every one of his holes filled with piss, cum and shit.

It was early morning when they untied him, and carried him to a soft bed, where he was washed and allowed to rest. When Mike awoke the next morning, the three men were awaiting him, hard dicks in hand, and bowels full of a mess that needed a warm mouth to harbor it.

GIVE ME ALL YOU GOT, STUD

Remember these guys?

"Ohhhhh, Yeeaah Yeeaaaah! Let me... Let me smell that shit, man. Awwwww, fuck That's a hell of a lot better turn-on than those poppers."

Again and again, the boy sniffed the stench into his lungs. His lips parted, his tongue crept out, curling spoon-like into the warm, fresh softness which only minutes earlier his stud's bowels had issued to him. Eagerly, he began to pull the brown waste into his hungry mouth.

"Please, Sir! I'm hungry. I'm starving for that funky turd.

"Oh, Stud! Give it to me! Let mehave it! Make me take it from you. Tonight, I'm your shitlicker, turd sucker, crap-eater. Force me to go all the way in serving you." In the back of his mind he wished this scene could go on forever. Hs needed to be possessed by a man who could really put him to use.

"That's it! Do your worst, Stud!"

"Jerk my yearning jaws open, stuff my hungry mouth with that beautiful offering from your big, hairy, full shitter. "Yeah, force-feed me! Shit fuck my crap craving mouth."

"All of it, Mister."

"Son-of-a-bitch, I want to eat all of it. Shove it on me; push it down my throat. Use me as your filthy toilet, Sir."

"Look at me, SIR!"

"Look at your shit in my mouth. Now you know me for the kind of kid I really am, so put me through your paces. Don't let me miss anything."

"Oh, Yesssss! Use me! Make me serve you, your buddies."

"Come-on, shit-face! Chew that fucking load up. Swallow that turd slowly or I'll cram this huge ram of mine inside that full mouth and pile-drive every bit of that shit straight down into your waiting belly.

"That's it, boy! Take it slow. There's a hell of a lot more where that came from, and I want to give it all to you before the night's over."

What a fucking turn-on this kid had become, laying there on the floor, chewing up the last of the giant turd, his enormous horse-like pecker clutched in his grimy hand.

From the rock hard erection he was displaying, to the look of total satisfaction across his face, it was easy to see that he was enjoying the hell out of everything that was happening to him.

Swallowing the last of the stud's load, he looked up and saw the man laid back not far from him.

Slithering across the floor, he cried out, "Let me lick your filthy hole clean, SIR. Oh, SIR! Push more shit into my mouth. MORE! MORE SHIT!!!"

"I'm so fucking hungry, hungry for your shit."

He loved groveling on the floor before this filthy asshole. He needed to be dominated, used, abused.

"MORE!" This time it was the tongue raped man making the demand. "MORE! Use your fist!"

"That's right, fucker. There's a lot more shit up this big butthole of mine, but you've gotta dive in there and get it yourself."

Knowing exactly what had to be done, the kid quickly reached out, scooping up as much of the softened shit and slimy spit as he could find, and began smearing the gooey mixture around the gaping crapper.

Forming a giant wedge, the fingers began sliding inside the man's butt as he strained to take them all the way.

"Come-on, Shit-Freak, work on that asshole," the guy cried as he felt the fist turning, twisting, pumping deep inside his shit tunnel.

It was obvious that he was really getting off on it the way he kept moaning, working his own body on it as he jerked his own fist up and down the colossal column of hard, rigid flesh which was stretching straight upward from his overgheated crotch.

"That's it, boy! Spread that big ass apart and search for your dinner."
"Yeah! Fuck the living shit out of my hole.

Hs felt the kid's fist sliding in and out of his butthole and knew that he was driving beyond the wrist, working in a big part of his forearm.

Pushing down, he tried to suck more of the arm with his eager hole.

The kid loved the way the taut asscheeks were working up and down, around his impaling fist, but he was anxious to get his whole face in there.

Hs pulled back, the asshole clutching, bulging outward like a giant pair of brown, puckered lips.

The steaming chute didn't want to let go of that plunging raper, that plowing fist. Twisting around onto his knees, the fisted guy, half-demanding, half pleading, cried out, "I want this asshole fucked wide open. Bust it with something. Get something big and shove it in there.

Spotting an enormous rubber dick laying in the corner, the kid grabbed it. "You sure you want this dildo?" he asked.

The man turned his head so that he could get a good Look at the size of it. "Hell, never in my life have I seen one as big as that, but I know that I want to have it. Yeah, I have to see what it's gonna feel like in my ass."

He started moving his ass beck and forth, grinding the huge set of lips against the head of the dildo.

"Come-on, kid! I can't wait to have you bust my ass with that thing."

"Shit, man! You got some big, fucking asshole," the kid moaned as he screwed the incredible head of that gigantic dick all the way through the extraordinary sphincter.

Squirming, thrusting, bucking with his hips, he wanted it! He wanted it all! He wanted it bad and the kid sure as hell was not going to hold back. No! He rammed the rubber dick into the man's gut with unrelenting fury, pounding the shit out of the super eager butthole.

Harder and harder, deeper and deeper, he pummeled the stud's asshole with the big, thick tool watching as his panting became very rapid as if he were suffering uncontrollable pain, but his cries were those of sheer, unabated pleasure.

"Go down on it, kid! You can take it! Hell, that grubby mouth of yours is every bit as big as my crapper. So, if I can take it, you can, too."

All the kid could think of was shit as he strained, his jaws aching, fucking the dildo in and out between his lips. The deep ramming caused him to gag. Shitty vomit rose into the back of his mouth, and he swallowed, reeating the bellyful, time and time again.

He had lost control, didn't care any longer how he was used. Any time, any place, any way, this shit fucking stud could have him, could use him, could give him away to be used by others. He had found what he needed. Now he would find a way to hold onto it.

Unconscious of what was happening, he suddenly realized that he had taken his own prick into his hand, and without moving a finger, he had bolted a. long, sticky, steamy supply of scum out of his horse-dick and across his body. Humbled but totally unashamed of all that had happened, he lay at the feet of his STUD.

I never heard that one. I just heard a replay of "Mel's Hole" and I think it's the funniest show I've ever heard in my life. I was laughing out loud, Mel is a master story-teller, it was just hilarous. I emailed him asking him to do a followup show but it bounced.

- Ah, then you want to pay 10 to 20 times

- Also, the rich would never stand for having

WOW not just 10%~20% more for the Food We Eat

That's extraordinarily dangerous thinking.

Google is not the government. But Google IS an entity operating within the United States, and benefits from the freedoms enjoyed by the citizens. When Google is petitioned by the Government to silence criticism of that government, it has a responsibility to stand and resist the violations of the Rights of the People expressed by the Government's petition to silence that criticism.

Google most certainly does have a duty.

While you may argue the point of need, or duty, that Google offers a report claiming transparency, while being the second most deceptive and disingenuous corporation on the planet would be laughable if it weren't so tragic.

If they're going to offer a 'transparency report,' they DO ideed have a need and a duty to be transparent.

Late last night, Scott Olsen, a former Marine, two-time Iraq war veteran, and member of Iraq Veterans Against the War, sustained a skull fracture after being shot in the head with a police projectile while peacefully participating in an Occupy Oakland march. The march began at a downtown library and headed towards City Hall in an effort to reclaim a site—recently cleared by police—that had previously served as an encampment for members of the 99% movement.

Scott joined the Marines in 2006, served two-tours in Iraq, and was discharged in 2010. Scott moved to California from Wisconsin and currently works as a systems network administrator in Daly, California.

Most Constitutional guarantees of freedom apply to all persons in the jurisdiction of the United States, not just citizens.

Well, I think, this practise is intentional altering of the human body.
I do not really like it. Its like piercing or tattoos, what I don't like neither.

But people may do what they like.

Another question is, what you do with your kids, since these cannot defend themselves. Early childhood traumata of any sort are generally unhealthy.

Communism is a bad thing in my eyes and closely related to fascism.
Personally I think, that fascism and communism are two sides of the same coin. Both - btw- have roots in London. Marx and Engels lived there.

The Brits supported the communists and are themself responsible for a few massacres. But I even think, the Brits supported the Nazis, too.
Hitler could possibly be a kind of 'British spy'. The entire story of the so called third Reich is more than dubious. Most likely its all fake and crime. But I cannot tell anything for sure.

I usually follow ideas and inspirations, then research, read, look at old pictures or films.

Usually I try to find inconsistencies. One of these was a 'storm belt' over the wrong shoulder - on a person that opens the door of a car for Hitler. This means, the film is reverted and left and right exchanged.
Possibly to hide the fact, that the car was designed to drive on the left side.

The Radiation Database - The World's Most Powerful Electromagnetic Radiation Sources

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TUF3PBKnXUo

Is there ANY internet speech worth putting to practice, that would help ALL of humanity enough to save itself from its own fate of being totally mind-controlled by the EM mode of communication worldwide? One might wonder why it is, that all of these intersecting lines of communication have no respect for the magnetic or gravitational field lines of a more passive inhabitant? As one can plainly see - the earth itself is an energy grid:

http://www.flickr.com/photos/lfdeale/5897989692/sizes/l/in/photostream/http://img87.imageshack.us/img87/4587/earhole1xf1.png http://www.loohan.com/grid.gif http://www.wakeuphumanity.com/uploads/1/8/1/1/1811438/8151873.jpg?862

The earth is also a dynamically changing medium of magnetic and gravitational energy, which affects the biospherical harmonic:

http://img225.imageshack.us/img225/2475/laudeharmonic.jpg

as well as the Schumann wavelength throughout the ionosphere:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=xK2j_V7keGY&feature=related

With so much EM pollution going on, it's no wonder chaos outbreaks worldwide is on the rise. In conclusion, maybe some of our anti-FCC and pro-Independent media need to consider supporting a Tesla Dome-protected Natural Human and Wildlife Preserve Project, (manufacturing vibrations at an artificial Schumann wave-length), as well as ridding its inhabitants of the nuisance of roads and gasoline powered automobiles, in favor of flying cars and space projects.

IMO too much EM pollution on earth and in orbit, smothers the growth potential in ways not easily discernible by most.

I agree.

I don't care if the government is attempting to prevent or control free speech or it is an individual or corporation, any attack on, or attempt to repress, free speech needs to be dealt with quickly and severely ...

Else, let them declare their intentions openly and let the chips fall

You should be aware that your posting can be taken as an endorsement to use the design and plans for protection. It should be noted that any energies/waves/powers/microwaves entering from the bottom of this device will only be focuses upon the brain cavity and even the brain proper which is being enclosed in the device. Indeed, it is extremely likely that this device could cause damage rather then stop or reduce it, at least in some specific situations!

This could leave you open to lawsuits from those using the device and suffering permanent brain damage!

Just sayin' ... and those considering the use of such a device might want to explore other designs or offerings.

Well then, I can only speculate now, perhaps he read one of your posts just before that incident?

I want to pay wages to Americans so they can support themselves, their families and society in general. I don't want cheap slaves working in fields supporting a society feeding off of them, such as blacks were used in the past, for one example. I don't want a class which has to steal to meet their needs, and especially NOT after having worked a job that day!

But, it isn't an either/or type of situation. The basic human rule of "A fair days pay for a fair days work" only has to be applied for all to have sufficient resources to meet their needs ... only recently, when we have forgotten this, has the world taken a severe off course direction leading to HELL!

Unfortunately to the BerZerKeLey {Bolshevik} Invaders of Oakland; Scott Olsen is a useful 'tool' in Their Quest for Political Power and Their Elitist Need To Rule Over 'The Masses'.

Note : That Scott Olsen is from Daly City [SF-Lite] and NOT and Oakland Resident : Who came to Oakland TO RAISE HELL ON THE CITY [.]

May Scott Olsen Recover and Be Well; also stay home and protest in his own town.

and that's how 'i' see it ~ RHF

Quick:

Name a Linux app you claim the Mac (please note that "MAC" is an acronym for Media Access Controller, among other things, not the name of Apple's computers).

You can bet that these "occupy" events are financed, planned and staged by George Soros, Obama, the Democrat Party, whatever ACORN calls itself nowadays, unions, and every other liberal, leftist, socialist and communist organization you can think of. In other words, everyone who hates the USA. Personally, I would like all of them to attend Occupy Jail.

By observation, experience, incomparison to other companies operating in the US. That declaration was made by a number of privacy advocate, and corporate watchdogs.

Google's track record in matters of integrity and transparency is only marginally better than that of the Ethyl Corporation. Read the TOS for Google. The privacy policies for Google. Then read the privacy policy for one of their products like GMail. The contradictions and obfuscations are quite striking.

And while many users read the TOS associated with a product, few bother to delve into the policies of Google, itself. It takes some pretty determined digging, to find the real intent of the policies and product TOS for Google.

The mantra "Don't be evil," is laughable on its face.

Even if that means keeping slanderous/libelous material on the site, opening them up to legal liability and lawsuits as an accessory to such defamation?

I can't do it if I don't have the source code nor the compiler.

Defamation, in this case, was not defined. And in the case of a public figure, is all but impossible to pursue. So, until the terms of these particular defamation cases are revealed, this is all just conversation.

But the reason for the removal of the material that was critical of the government was 'government criticism.'

That's where the duty to resist pressures from the government stands. The government, the First Amendment, precludes the Government from silencing, or causing to be silenced, those critical of the government.

But that's the point, Howard:

All the thing the Linux types blather on about are the ones for which you can get the source codes and the compilers.

Yeah, frivolous lawsuits and prosecutions need to end also ... political manipulations of events and elections, whether by hundreds of millions of dollars or staged media events are crimes against the citizens ...

Sorry, but the law most certainly does define what it is.

On the contrary, they simply have to fail a lawsuit like anyone else.

As is the assertion they shouldn't remove them either.

Yea, and from reports in a slanderous/libelous manner.

Sorry, but if the material was defamation in the legal sense or even could reasonable be, then Goggle has a self interest to remove the material to protect itself from legal liability as being an accessory.
The same as if you post copyrighted work and so on. If they are notified and they fail to remove it, then they open themselves up to legal liability by being an accessory.

> That's where the duty to resist pressures from the government stands.

Sure, if it's purely a 1st Amendment issue, however slander/libel isn't protected under the 1st and for good reason.

> The government, the First Amendment, precludes the Government from > silencing, or causing to be silenced, those critical of the government.

Not if the criticism is slander or libel. Then it most certainly can do so.

Just as the FCC can notify goggle they are hosting a copyrighted video and so on. If they fail to cease the copyright infringement then that would open Goggle up to legal action against them.

It would only be slander if it was proven to NOT be true ... obviously, with the current state of politics and criminal public servants, most any despicable, criminal, or perverted act you can imagine them doing is most likely true ... sad, so very, very sad ... in very short order the respect which respectable citizens once had for their government is gone.

You mean like the practice of fraudulent deception in claimed business practices, mission statements, and implied foundations of the contracts you are agreeing to, and for the purpose of gaining or increasing profits? Really? That needs explaining? If so, I don't believe any possible will be acceptable to you!

That assumes the lawsuits would be frivolous.
What if the material really is slander/libel and the lawsuit utterly justified?
Should Goggle open itself up to such legal liability simply because of the subject that the slander/libel is contained within?
Let's say I paint some slander on your house about a neighbor. Your neighbor complains to you that what I painted is slander?

So you stand on your soapbox and refuse to remove the slander because you're not going to bend, or do you paint over the slanderous remarks I 'posted' on your property?

If it were simply criticisms, then I doubt it would have been an issue, but since the criticism contains slander/libel then that makes it an issue and Goggle can't selectively edit your work to remove the slander/libel they simply dump the whole thing and if you wish to repost it without the slander/libel then you could do so.

Bingo! The number one reason linux is superior, anyone can write apps for it without purchasing anything ... indeed, if linux doesn't support your app, you can even go the OS source and make it do so.

For some strange reason, I am tempted to say I have never seen anyone improve on natures/Gods' design with a knife ... I should doubt that there is a single exception to this ...

However, that said, this should be no argument or reason to deny the practice of relatively "safe" procedures such as ear piercings, tattoos, circumcisions, etc. to those so desiring.

I like this thread, because the collection of other boards that participate is amazing. Usually I wouldn't write about golf, shortwave

I tend to see true socialism as reflecting the way of the American Indians tribes model(s.) The tribe shares in the work of the tribe, the problems of the tribe, the solutions of the tribe, the assets of the tribe, etc. They are banded together for the betterment of each and every member and the tribe as a whole. While that may, or may not, mean each and everyone has "exactly the same" as any other, it does imply they have equal rights and that a minimum of help and support is granted to any and every single member of that tribe ...

Indeed, without socialism, the human race could never have progressed to the point of where we stand today ... communism is certainly a vastly differing system, as is capitalism.

No matter what title you give to an elite group stealing all the others creator granted resources and then using these resources to enslave others, it only looks criminal from a distance. Indeed, communists often accuse capitalists of the same crimes which capitalists are accusing communists of ... stealing others resources to enrich themselves ... and those accusations being made on the rich elite group(s) which tend to have dominance over the other members of the society.

The best, and perhaps the only way to be able to picture this, is from the 3rd person perspective. Or, say you are an alien arriving in a spaceship and meet bill gates standing beside a minimum wage earner, or worse, a starving child, and asking yourself, "Why is that a proper form and model for a society to follow?"

LOL!

I like to include conspiracy because everything we humans do is a conspiracy, and usually we attempt to involve more than just ourselves in in. Whether we are conspiring to change another point of view, or conspiring to have others examine our logic and we theirs, etc.

And, this, all, in contrast to the criminal conspiracies of criminal pubic servants in public servant offices, whose duty is to carry out the will of the majority while making sure those duties do not injure a single person, group, or groups -- i.e., a minority. And, fulfill their duties in their oaths to uphold the Constitution and guarantee the government of the people, by the people and for the people.

From the time me and the wife get up, until we lay our heads down at night, we are engaged in an open conspiracy to improve and enrich, not only our own situation, but our family, friends and communities ... our only enemies are those working against our endeavors -- unfortunately, there are many, and their numbers seem to grow these days ...

No, only people who have the know-how and willingness to write their own drivers can do so. Which is a very small subset of those who use computers.

I don't see any economic system as being "true". And the more people

I don't think it is even deniable that google will always succumb to the threats of criminals and political power. Nor do I think in this day, at this time, that this is not an effective way to increase corporate and stockholders interests ...

Indeed, while the old adage "crime doesn't pay" is seemingly honored in its' logic, it really is false. I seem to see crime paying quite nicely
... it is only getting caught which "doesn't pay!"

And, of course, when you are a criminal, the only safe place is in the position of authority which is responsible for determining crimes and punishments.

I expect google to be no different ... they should hardly be expected to police themselves, indeed, no finer example of "the fox guarding the hen house could be given!"

If we are to allow them to be able to control access to free speech, the posting of videos, etc., simply on the claim "I am afraid I will be prosecuted or punished", when we expect to see an end to this not controlling their decisions in ways which are personally enriching and self-serving?

If I were a republican, and owned a media outlet, I should think it would be quite easy to let republicans speak all they wish ... and when a democrat seeks to rebut, make the statement, "I am afraid of libel and/or slander charges, he cannot say that here!"

Even "false fear" can be used as weapon ... and in this, we need to be forever vigilant ...

Appendectomy
If you don't use that knife, you die.

And a lot of the Biblical constraints do have some basis in better sanitation and health Circumcision included.

4536. Faulty Chinese generators....

I've had it with Chinese garbage. The amount of trash they produce each year staggers the imagination. What's even more amazing is that we continue to buy it. 'Customer' is quickly becoming synonymous with 'Stupid'.

This is the starter solenoid from a 5kw Chinese diesel generator (Launtop powered):

The machine has two hours TOTAL running time. Note the quality rubber boot. Also note the soldered connections. Those are the solenoid winding terminations. You can NOT get at the contacts until you de-solder the wires. I learned that when I had to clean the non-conducting starter contacts on another, similar, Launtop machine.

This is the reason why the starter wouldn't crank the engine over:

I'm lucky the broken piece didn't get caught in the flywheel ring gear.

This is from the socket set I used to remove the battery terminal lug nuts with.

Care to guess where they were made?

This particular model of Launtop generator is sold under dozens of different names. There has been a recall on them. They have counterfeit ISO 2001, CE and Canadian Standards Association (like UL) decals on them.

The breakers are also improperly marked. The Canadian Standards people are doing NOTHING to help me, despite the fraudulent use of their Trademarked logo. Launtop is also doing nothing. Red maple seems to be conveniently out of business.

Don't buy Chinese.

Yeah, in their case, the users you speak of, it only benefits by allowing the apps to be created which are freely available and cheap ... that is NOT a benefit to a minority, it is of true and real benefit to all involved ...

1) They don't have to put one out
They CHOOSE to do so
2) Who would "require it of them" anyway ?
